

Vox Wesleyana

October, 1899

"All ye who possess the power of that, prize it well. Remember that its flight is infinite ; it winds about over so many mountain tops, and so runs from poetry to eloquence, it so flies from star to star, it so dreams, so loves, so aspires, so hangs both over mystery and fact, that we may well call it the effort of man to explore the home, the infinite palace of his Heavenly Father."

—Seving.
