OUR TABLE.

CREAP COLUNIAL EDITIONS OF THE "LATIN

TE have seen, with great plasure, a few neat specimens of some of the "Latin Classics" usually found in Colleges and Schools. The pirited publishers, Messrs. Armour & Ramsay, of this city, have already, we understand, prelared nearly the whole, and we are assured that ther are got up with such accuracy and care as to compare favorably with anything of the same kind ever attempted in Britain, while the prices will be such as to recommend them to all who have hitherto felt, or may hereafter feel, the hear, expenses attendant upon the education of

The quote a passage from the publishers' adrerusement:-

There is no want of excellence in many of these, but dere is no want of excellence in many or the they are generally either so comprehensive or so exceeded to tended by annotations, that the price is an obstacle to those who, entertaining enlarged views of the advantages of educations. of education, have not means commensurate with their title. rithes. It is, therefore, the intention of the subscribers, to light of such detached to Publish neat and correct editions of such detached by tion. positions of the Classic authors as are usually read in Eng-Schools and Colleges. This plan has been tried in England and Colleges. and and has been attended with marked success.

and has been attended with marked success.
To those who are obliged to study economy in education, those who are obliged to study economy actions, these editions will be recommended by their cheannal limited in their cheapness, their accuracy, and their being limited in their telent to that which is absolutely necessary.

To that which is absolutely necessary. To those, who either possess, or can afford to possess ore example. those, who either possess, or can afford to possess, or can afford to possess as a pensive editions, these little copies will be offered that appears that speedy injury ts a Deans of saving the others from that speedy injury or deaten. or death of saving the others from that speed, and death of death of the daily transit between a more portable and convenient, more fair and scholar-like in the classtonenient, more fair and scholar-like in the tone hot open to the just and reasonable objection to the just and reasonable objection oberged with notes, hot open to the just and reasonance outside Tutors make to editions so charged with notes, at they choost amount to a translation.

The first numbers of the series consist of the talioning:-

Accepted from Cornelius Nepos, The First Four Escepts from Cornelius Nepos, The Fast of Casar, The Georgics of Virgil, The Fasti of The Marks of Quintus Curtius, tid, The Third and Fourth Books of Quintus Curtius, Chero de Amicitia, Cicero de Senectute, Taciti Agricola, and Excerpts from Horace—to be followed in rapid succan by Sallust's History of Cataline's Conspiracy, the the four Books of Virgil's Æueid, and other Standard

he heed only add our cordial wish that the publishers may meet that full measure of Publishers may meet that run means that sun have so justly earned.

DAVID COPPERFIELD.

This story progresses, and the interest is well kept up. The author has lost none of his quaint shrewdness, and agreeable sentimentality. The regret with which the last page of the number is approached, combined with a similar feeling at the knowledge of the time which must clapse before another is received, is the tribute which all readers pay to the work.

THE NEW-YORK ALBION.

A BEAUTIFUL engraving, "The First Trial by Jury," has just been delivered to the subscribers of this excellent journal. It is a life-like picture of an imaginary historical occurrence,—the time that of Aifred the Great,-the scene a trial in the open air, presided over by that good king and excellent man. The beautifully-grouped figures are those of the supposed murderer, the dead man, his weeping wife, and excited son,the jury on one side,-and two of the Witan or Saxon Council, with the Monarch, on the other. The painter has conceived the subject in a masterly manner, and the engraver has done him justice. It is really a beautiful thing.

WE are sorry that our friend of the Christian Guardian should have had occasion to find fault with us. We can assure him, however, that the offence was altogether unintentional, as we did not imagine that any of the highly respectableand we may add, universally respected -- body in this country, to which the Guardian belongs, would have taken offence at a grotesque description of a scene, imaginary or real, which has not been altogether without parallel within the last quarter of a century, but nothing resembling which, at least in this country, has been heard of for many years.