

his tenants. The fact that he served the notices of his tenants... threatening him with death if he did not let these farms to a man in the parish.

threatening him with death if he did not let these farms to a man in the parish. Thinking that, as no one had been aggrieved, the storm would soon blow over...

Important changes have occurred since the 10th of May, 1866, but there is one which in an especial manner deserves notice in the columns of this journal.

What statesman can solve such a problem as this narrative presents? Night—the attack on Mr. Hickson occurred within two miles of Oatley Pollard.

May 12.—Another attempted assassination in the county of Westmeath attended the desperate character of the Riband system in that county.

One who describes himself as 'A Scotsman and a Good Protestant' writes to the North British Daily Mail to bear testimony to the real happiness and contentment of the nuns he frequently saw at the well known Convent of the Sacred Heart of Rossington.

national, tongues, and powers, whose home I think was happy, and whose only regret was the temporary departure of the ladies I was to accompany.

REMNANTS OF PERSECUTION.—Whereas it is expedient, such are the words of the Emancipation Act, to make provision for the gradual suppression and final prohibition of all religious orders, each person bound by religious vows, not duly reporting himself...

There is good reason to believe that Mr. Bright will not again take any active part in the present Administration. Two months ago the right hon gentleman wrote to Mr. Gladstone tendering his resignation of office...

last that the 'sticking' Fenians were again at their work, in consequence of an explosion which took place upon the premises of a Mr. Johnston, a master builder of this city, on the Saturday night previous.

The last aristocratic bankrupt is Lord Courtenay, eldest son of the Earl of Devon. He must surely feel the family motto 'ubi lapsus quia feci' to be singularly appropriate.

THE GREEKS AND THE GRECIAN BEND.—The Greeks never changed their style of dress. The plain robe and tunic of Phidias resembled the robe and tunic of Demosthenes, the peplos of Helen huge in similar folds to that of the peplos of Aspasia.

leave that office to the original mover of the inquiry, or to allow the matter to drop altogether. It now appears that though the House disposed on Monday night of the most offensive part of the proposed inquiry, there remain two others to be prosecuted by the Select Committee.

Next, there are those congregations of religious men perfectly untouched by the penal laws, where, though the members live in community for a common purpose, the property of each remains vested in the owners as completely as if they still lived in separate establishments of their own.

A Washington despatch says that for the Fenians to attempt anything at Red River would be the height of folly; but then it adds—that is no reason for assuming that the attempt has not been planned on the contrary it is rather an argument for its credibility—a Fenian argument of course.