When the Mistake is Yours, Help Correct it

Sometimes as soon as you give the operator a telephone number from memory, you realize you have called the wrong number. The first impulse is to hang up the receiver, but, you should wait and say to the other party, "Beg pardon for calling the wrong number." Then everybody feels all right about it.

If you hang up the receiver without acknowledging your error, the operator gets the blame when she tells the other party that "there's no one on the line."
