What to Have for Breakfast, Dinner and Tea. ENUS are not so helpful as they might be if they were not taken so seriously. By this I mean that no menu is planned to meet the positive requirements of any family, but must be changed, added to or taken from to suit purse and individual needs.

When this is remembered many valuable suggestions for good ombinations can be had from them The following half-week's bill of fare includes the fruits that are in season and offers a generous choice. Whether a constant variety of food is needed and whether it adds to the cost of living, is a question that we invite

Sunday-Breakfast-Bacon, fried eggplant, hot Vienna bread, peaches, coffee. Dinner—Roast duck, succotash, stewed tomatoes, baked potatoes, nutmeg melons, tea, biscuit. Supper—Creamed potatoes, cold fowl, cocoa, Monday-Breakfast-Panned fish, toast, coffee, bananas. Lunch -

Graham bread, meat cakes with brown gravy, cornstarch pudding, milk. Tea-Corn-on-cob, meat and potato hash, muffins, honey, tea and fruit Saturday—Breakfast—Corn cakes, melon, coffee and rolls, or cereal, rolls, fruit and coffee. Luncheon—Rice omelette, mashed potatoes, or fried apples, tea and Boston brown bread. Dinner—Mutton stew with caper or mint sauce, creamed squash, French potatoes, baked pears, chilled and served with cream. A good understanding of combination of food helps any woman to se an abundant table. With this she should know how to use left-overs. For instance, in the menu given above for Monday you will see that the meat balls left from luncheon are used with the creamed potatoes left from Sunday supper to make an always appetizing dish—hash. As two-thirds of the families in the land have an income of less than eight hundred a year and live comfortably within it, we must suppose that the remaining third, whose income will run into thousands, are wilfully extravagant. The businesslike ways in which women divide their incomes is one of the most interesting topics of the day, and we are glad to make results public so all
