XCVII.—A Holiday.

"Helene, I can't hide my feelings any say you do, dear heart!" longer. I—I care tremendously for you, my dear!" Jim looked into my eyes.

We ware resting for any eyes.

"I think—I've always cared," I said, my dear!" Jim looked into my eyes. We were resting for a moment on a half-shyly, and speaking very low.

He kissed me as though he'd never afraid of something.

Perhaps, woman-like, I was frightened of the happiness that surely lay ahead of me. Who knows?

CONTINUE WITHOUT And so I maintained silence, while Jim poured out the old, old tale that somehow or other is always new and always sweet. "I can't wait any longer for you, dearest," he was saying, smiling boyishly, and plucking a spray of violets as he spoke, "I care for you so much, Helene, that it would be, too—too cruel—if you couldn't care for me!"

He caught me in his arms. I couldn't resist. It was the sheerest bliss to feel those dear arms round me bliss to feel those dear arms round me once again.

Overhead, the birds were twittering a goodnight song. Long, slanting rays from the setting sun filigreed through the branches of the trees above us. The world seemed to pause for a moment breathless at our happings. ment, breathless, at our happiness. ... "Oh, Jim." I murmured, close into his ear, "Oh. Jim—."

A mossible of the world and speaking very low.

He kissed me as though he'd never let me go.

The faint rustling of the woods was all about us. A young, clear green adorned the trees and bushes. And the cooing of wood-pigeons was wafted toward us, very soft and gentle, and all a-tune to this glad season of the year.

My head was on Jim's shoulder now, and I could see the scar resulting from his accident. It was a jagged, cruellooking scar, but in no way did it render Jim less handsome. And part of it was hidden under a thick wave of his hair.

REVISION ANGLO-JAP ALLIANCE, IS REPORT

TOKIO, June 13.—Continuance with-out revision of the Anglo-Japanese al-liance has been decided upon by the cabinet, and approved by the diplo-matic advisory council, according to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun. The newspaper reports the advisory council as approving also the cabinet's decision to guard with Japanese forces the vicinity of Nikolaievsk, Asiatic Russia, for the purpose of protecting Japanese and law-abiding Russians.

many pulpits throughout the province of Ontario today. In Toronto appeals were made from the pulpits of Protestants and Catholics. The attitude of the various denominations with reference to the matter was summed up by the Rev. Father Tryling in St. Michael's Cafhedral, "If ever there was at a worthy cause," he said, "it is the ald cause of the men who are about to seek re-establishment in civil life."

WATER CONSUMERS

On account of the continued dry weather conditions, the water consumption has enormously increased. The Public Utilities Commission finds it necessary, therefore, to order that in order that an adequate supply may be maintained for other purposes. Consumers are requested to observe the greatest economy in the use of water. ALL LEAKY TAPS should be repaired at once.

All Lawn and Garden Sprinkling

Must Be Discontinued

If the above instructions are not observed, the commission will order the water to be shut off from the premises of the consumer violating this order.
