Crimson Bayonets Tell Of Desperate Fighting

British Gradually Clear Germans From Bourlon Village; Important Gain; Cambrai May be Doomed; Great Work By Airmen

British Army Headquarters in France, Nov. 26.—(By the Associated Press).—This morning found the line of battle of the weary but determined British troops stretched in a semi-circle about Bourlon Wood and Bourlon village, which nestles at the northwestern edge of the forest. It was a line which had been established in the face of dogged resistance on the part of the Germans, who had taken step by step, fighting with the fury of despair.

All day yesterday the opposing forces struggled bitterly at close quarters for possession of the little village from which the British were forced on Friday after gaining a footing in the rush that took them through Bourlon Wood. Night-fall still found waves of infantry surging back and forth through the streets of the hamlet and among the houses, their crimson bayonets telling the story of the terrible conflict being waged. Gradually the Germans were being driven back, and re-established themselves on the old line.

Little by little the Germans were forced to give ground at the northwest edge of the wood about Bourlon village, until the British infantry reached the blood-stained streets of the hamlet once again. Dunk settled down about the center of the village, and the British, unable to withstand the fury of the German attack without too great a loss of life, withdrew slightly and the Germans gained a footing in the northern edge of the forest. But the British were not to let the matter rest, and they surged forward again. This time dismounted cavalrymen advanced with the infantry, and between them they drove the enemy back and re-established themselves on the old line.

The work of British airplanes during the present offensive forms a graphic picture in itself. In the face of the weather which compelled them to operate within a few feet of the ground, and the constant assistance of the reconnaissance and offensive operations.

There have been almost continual battles between German infantry and British tanks. The British tanks, however, have been given the task of clearing the way for the British infantry. Never before has such large scale fighting been witnessed in the history of the war. The British tanks, however, have been given the task of clearing the way for the British infantry. Never before has such large scale fighting been witnessed in the history of the war.

HEART WAS BAD NERVES ALL GONE

Very important it is in this age to have a clear cool head, a strong heart and steady nerves. Too much rush and bustle, and worry, fall to the lot of women attending to their household duties and social obligations. The constant strain under which they continue day in and day out will soon shatter the heart
