ANOTHER SENSATION AT PUBLIC LANDING

German and other suspects, including aeroplanes and signallers using Bald Mountain, may well stay away from the public landing at the St. John river, some fourteen miles from this city. What the natives or summer visitors do not know is certain to be found out by detectives from St. John.

There is the case of the two gentlemen from Japan, for instance. They are said to be attached to the Japanese Embassy at Washington, and last week they paid a visit to Glen Lyon, the summer home of Col. Livingstone, just across the river from Public Landing. They went up on Thursday and left the steamer by mistake at Public Landing, and while waiting to be taken across in a motor boat has heard many interesting questions by the boys and others, while their baggage was subjected to a search.

"Why do you ask so many questions?" queried one of them. "Do you think we are German spies?" They were not familiar with the natural curiosity of the St. John river boys. But they crossed to Glen Lyon, and on Saturday they left for Bar Harbor. The steamer D. J. Purdy, which brought them here, had the Champlain which was taking a detective up. The latter, when he found they had gone, telephoned the momentous news to the city and hired a motor boat to speed him cityward.

Here the narrative stops. Nobody at the public landing has heard any more about it and there are no japs in the jail in St. John. It is one of the dark mysteries of the great war and the detective bureau.
