CHURCH WILL BE RENOVATED.
Central Baptist church, corner Leinster and Carmarthen streets, is soon to undergo a thorough renovation. The edifice has not been gone over since the union of the Brussels street and Leinster street congregations more than ten years ago. Quite recently the historic bell was removed from the Brussels street building to the new house of the amalgamated congregations and the furnishings of the older church otherwise distributed. The painting, cleaning and other improvements to be made in the Central church during the summer season will greatly enhance the classic lines of the interior. An efficient committee has the renovations in charge.

WIN CERTIFICATES FOR FIRST AID PROFICIENCY.

As a result of the examination in first aid lately conducted by Doctor Allingham, the following fourteen young ladies, who have had the advantage of Doctor Hadden's careful instruction, succeeded in qualifying, thereby winning certificates of proficiency: Misses Gertrude Dunlop, Rachael Walker, Florence Perry, Jessie A. Hartt, Miss McGerrigle, Mrs. Peniston Johnston, Misses Doris Barbour, Annie MacMichael, Amy Napier, Alice Nixon, Nora Thompson, Blanche Beaty, Jean Ingletton and Marguerite Trites.

Miss Katherine Bates, Miss Olivia Maxwell and Miss Sarah Thomas, additional members of the class, having now passed their third examination, win the medal of the St. John Ambulance Association.

Much interest in these useful courses of instruction is shown in various parts of the province. Report forms received from St. Stephen show sixty successful home nursing students, forty in first aid; at Moncton twenty-one young ladies have just passed satisfactorily and reports from several other towns will soon be forwarded to the secretary of the association.

ST. JOHN NURSE ON TORPEDOED HOSPITAL SHIP

Miss Anna Stammers Had Been on Ocean Transport Work

ANXIETY IN ST. JOHN

Miss Margaret Floyd of Barnesville Likely Stayed in England This Time—Member of 26th, Who Crossed on Llandoverly Castle, Speaks of Ship

News of the sinking of the hospital ship Llandoverly Castle off the Irish coast on last Thursday strikes home with force and apprehensiveness in this city and the maritime provinces, for it is the proud boast of this section of Canada that we have had a band of nursing sisters crossing and re-crossing the Atlantic with sick and wounded men for quite a while. Admittedly news like military circles that only relatives and near friends of these young ladies have known of their frequent comings and goings of late months.

Miss Anna Stammers, nursing sister, daughter of Mrs. B. A. Stammers, Waterloo street, and sister of Mrs. John S. Addy, Waterloo street, had been a member of the torpedeed ship's staff for some months. A fortnight ago today she telephoned from Halifax to her home circle here just to say that she had arrived again, was well and happy. After a bit of shopping in the sister city Miss Stammers rejoined the ship and sailed away on the fateful voyage on Thursday, the 19th.

From these facts it is figured that the Llandoverly Castle had been on the return trip just one week to the day when the Huns got her. Previous to this last trip Nursing Sister Stammers had enjoyed a 24-hour stay in town with her mother, sister and relatives. On this occasion she was accompanied by Nursing Sister Floyd, a Barnesville girl, whose sister is Mrs. Brown of King street east. There is some doubt whether Miss Floyd was on the hospital ship when attacked as on one of her recent trips she suffered a severe sprain, either of the leg or wrist, and this may have delayed her on shore in England.

Nursing Sister Anna Stammers is a dear little woman, one of the girls of whom St. John may well be proud. It is practically impossible to find all right earnestly hoping to be located all right in one of the lifeboats. The fact that the ship was torpedoed nearly a week ago makes relatives keenly apprehensive but in various phases of nursing soldiers and on her brief homecomings she fairly radiated British pluck and enthusiasm and was an inspiration to all with whom she came in contact.

Miss Stammers greatly enjoyed her sea voyages. She came by her liking for service on the sea quite naturally for her father, the late Benjamin A. Stammers, was master of a navigation school conducted in Water street for years, a man considered thoroughly expert in nautical matters. In Baptist circles—her name is on the roll of honor in Central church—Miss Stammers has always been a cheerful worker and consistent communicant.

26th Man.

A Times reporter was talking today to a returned member of the 26th Battalion, who had come home on the Llandoverly Castle to Halifax in March. He said she was a fine vessel of about 11,000 tons. She had been in service between England and German East Africa before the war. In her hospital work she bore distinguishing marks, at night was always lighted and a bright lighted Red Cross at night was among the features that showed her to be a non-combatant.
