

Between Four Walls.

By GURKIN YORK.

It was snowing steadily—a small, fine, delicate snow, which was softly falling upon every little crack and crevice where a snow crystal could possibly lodge, and evidently meant to melt.

Do you feel better now?

There was nothing to be seen but snow—floating, whirling, dancing, in mad, beautiful, fantastic, mad thought, never meant to leave off. It was a dreary prospect. So at least thought a young girl who was talking through the window-panes to a blind man who sat in a chair in the room.

"Do you feel better now?" "No, I don't feel any better," answered the blind man. "I don't feel any better than I did when I was first brought here."

"What is the matter with you?" "I don't know," answered the blind man. "I don't know what is the matter with me. I don't know what is the matter with you either."

"Do you feel better now?" "No, I don't feel any better," answered the blind man. "I don't feel any better than I did when I was first brought here."

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

From the Montreal, C. C. Mrs. A. B. Cameron writes that being very much troubled with dyspepsia and indigestion, she had tried many bottles of Burdock's Blood Bitters, which gave her great relief, and hopes that others may be induced to try it also and receive like benefits.
