

CHICAGO ACTIVE IN ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION

City Council Blamed, Mayor Praised for Attitude on Prohibition.

Chicago, Jan. 3.—If the anti-prohibition City Council of Chicago were not sure that prohibition will work it would not go to such ridiculous lengths in opposition to the constitution of the United States. The beer and wine prohibition passed by the council was sponsored by a well-organized band of prohibition advocates. The intended reasons were, however, shameless and clumsy falsehoods.

While the legislative branch of the city government was being criticized in these words by O. G. Christman, editor of the American Press, official spokesman of the Anti-Saloon League of Illinois, the state superintendent of that league, F. Scott McBride, was praising the recent activity of the council as the branch of the administration.

"The mayor's order," said Mr. McBride, at the semi-annual meeting of the league here yesterday, "has been the best thing that has happened in the history of the city since the prohibition law was passed."

At Chicago on or before the prohibition law there is no place in the world where it is impossible. Mayor Thompson declares the cooperation of every church and business in the city is necessary to enforce the law. Special organizations of every county, ward and precinct in the city are being organized to enforce the law.

It is the prohibition opinion in Washington that if we can hold fast our Congress, the outcome of legislation in the upper chamber will be fully determined. Mr. McBride, however, at Springfield, said that the prohibition law is a good thing and that it is a good thing that it is a good thing.

"Practically every state in the Union," he said, "including New Jersey, which failed to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment, has forbidden wine and beer by state law."

"DIAMOND DYES" IS HALF A CENTURY OLD.

Somebody out of touch with truth once said there is no sentiment in business. Another greater in wisdom, declared: "They profit most who serve best."

All this year past a concern that helped put Burlington, Vermont, on the map of national business, is celebrating fifty years of successful service of the world.

"Diamond Dyes" is half a century old and they are having a series of happy episodes to mark the anniversary.

"Diamond Dyes" is a heroic example of the power of advertising, for the great of small beginnings now covers a city block. The business was built on "diamond food" the advertising that has made "Diamond Dyes" a household name.

The Better Man

By MAE CHRISTIE
II.—REGINALD VAN TUYL IN PURSUIT

Camilla hung herself into the nearest chair and eyed the astonished youth resentfully.

"Camilla, what on earth's the matter? The backwoods? What for the love of Mike don't you mean by saying such a thing?"

"About she said, nonchalantly: 'I never guessed you were in a position to propose to any girl.'"

"The young man bit his lip. He had his tongue well in hand, however. The stakes were high here. He must play the game with skill.

"You may choose to insult me, but I can't help loving you," he said. In his voice he managed to infuse a genuine-sounding note.

Camilla was the one who flushed. "Excuse me, Reggie, I'm tired and out-of-control tonight. I—maybe I'm a bit spoilt—and unbecomingly so. So many men have said that sort of thing."

She rose and stood before the electric chandelier, so that the light fell full upon the ring.

"That's a heavenly sapphire, and matches my frock exactly. Where on earth did you get it?"

"The young man hesitated for the fraction of a second. Then he spoke. 'I pegged out a claim on the Van River, several years ago. Found that stone, and a few others. Then I chucked it, and came home to England.'

Camilla raised her brows. "You've been a fool of her, you want it? As a matter of fact, I thought you'd only worked in the diamond mines in Kimberley?"

For answer, Reginald Van Tuyl caught up her cloak which was gracefully fastened across a chair back, flung it about her shoulders and said hastily:

"Come on, Camilla. The evening's passing, and I've got a fast waiting for us down below. You're a hard-headed little fellow. But just for tonight, please me—wear my ring!"

"I—Kilke, you're—well, Reggie, I'm in a different matter, isn't it? You've been a splendid sort of fellow. I—suppose I'm fond of you, and all that sort of thing."

"But me no buts," said Reggie cheerfully. He pulled Camilla down the passage to the front door, and from thence into the street.

"You're as much in love with me, my dear, as you'll ever be with anybody else. And you realize that I could make you happy."

Japan Reducing Size of Its Army

To Increase Its Effectiveness
by Efficiency and Modernization.

Tokio, Jan. 3.—Japan is preparing a comprehensive scheme of army reorganization, featured by a one-sixth reduction in the standing army within four years, beginning in 1923, according to the Tokyo Nichi Nichi. The scheme provides for the reduction of the army from its present strength of 300,000 to 200,000, the first reduction to be made in the 1923 budget.

The Nichi Nichi states, however, that the authorities' purpose is not necessarily to decrease the strength of Japan's army, but rather to increase its effectiveness by using the funds saved on the personnel account to modernize weapons, intensify army training by new schools and increase the industrial efficiency of the nation's arms makers.

This paper quotes an army authority to the effect that arms development has not kept pace with numbers and the new plans aim to give the nation modern equipment, especially machine guns, tanks and aircraft.

The naval authorities are working out plans designed to prevent a collapse in the shipbuilding industry when capital ship construction ends a few months hence. It aims to do this by redistributing contracts for auxiliary craft. Naval officials state that the Hughes proposals will permit Japan to complete virtually her entire auxiliary programme under the eight-year plan.

An anomaly resulting from laying the keels of the two battle cruisers, the Atago and Tabara, forty-four thousand tonnes, recently is that Japan now has six capital ships building, whereas she had only four building when the Hughes proposals were made.

Naval leaders explain it is impossible to cancel the contracts for these construction. Both the Atago and the Atago are building in private yards, the former in the Mitsubishi dockyards, at Nagasaki, the latter in the Kawasaki dockyards, at Kobe. It is stated absolutely that it is in no wise contemplated to push work on these and four other capital ships, the Katsuragi, Tama, Amagi and Akagi, but work on building in private yards, a reduced schedule until final instructions came from Admiral Kato at Washington.

From an official source are emanating statements to the effect that Japan will not accept an interpretation of the quadruple treaty as covering Japan's proper. It stated such interpretation reflects adversely Japan's sovereignty and position as a great power, since the treaty does not affect the homeland of any other of the three parties.
