she exclaimed — "Who is that who holds my cloak?"

"Don't be silly," said the eldest sister; you caught on some nail or other, that is all."

So they went completely down, and at the bottom was a wonderful avenue of trees, whose leaves were all silver, and shone and glittered. The soldier thought he would take one branch for a token, and broke it off, when a tremendous crack sounded as from the tree.

"It is not all right!" cried the youngest; "did you not hear that crack?"

"That is a shot of welcome," said the eldest, "because we have been so lucky."

Then they passed into another avenue where the leaves were of gold, and then into a farther one, where they shone like diamonds. From both he broke off a twig, and each time the youngest princess shrieked with terror, while the eldest declared they were guns of welcome. So they came to a lake on which were twelve little boats, and in each boat a handsome prince, who each took one sister, and the old soldier sat down in the boat where the youngest one was.

"I know not how it is," said the prince, but the boat seems much heavier than usual."

"Perhaps that proceeds from the warmth of the weather," said the princess; "I am myself much more heated than usual."

On the other side of this water stood a noble castle, and one could hear music within. Towards this they rowed, went in, and each prince danced with his own partner, while the soldier danced among them all invisible. The youngest sister again felt very uneasy. They danced till three in the morning, when they had to desist because their shoes were in holes. The princes rowed them back again, but this time the soldier sat with the eldest princess. On the shore they took leave of the princes and promised to return.

When they came to the steps, the soldier ran up first and lay down in bed; and when the sisters came up he snored so loudly that they all cried—"How much safer could we be?" Then they locked up their fine clothes, and putting their dancing shoes under the bed, they lay down to sleep.

Next morning the soldier said nothing, wishing to see more of this wonderful affair, and so the second and third nights passed like the first, and the soldier, for an additional token, brought away a cup from the ball-room. When the time arrived for him to answer, he first concealed the twigs and cup about him, and then went to the king, while the twelve princesses stood behind the door and listened to all that was said.

"Where have my daughters danced during the night?"

"With twelve princes in the subterranean castle," he replied; and, relating everything as it occurred, he produced his witnesses, the three twigs and the cup.

The king then summoned his daughters and asked them if the soldier had spoken the truth. They were obliged to confess he had; and the king asked him which he would have for a wife.

"I am no longer young," he replied, "and so it had better be the eldest."

Thereupon the wedding was celebrated the self-same day, and the kingdom came to him at the old king's death.

Attacks of cholera and dysentery come quickly, there seldom being any warning of the visit. Remedial action must be taken just as quickly if the patient is to be spared great suffering and permanent injury to the lining membranes of the bowels. The readiest preparation for the purpose is Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. It can be got at small cost at any drug store or general dealer's, and it will afford relief before a doctor can be called.
