

The many faces of the Gateway

A good newspaper has a character of its own, not just in content but in appearance.

A business newspaper (say the Financial Post) looks well organized, serious and respectable - but with a touch of enterprise; one expects figures quoted to be reliable, contents to be well researched and assertions documented.

A gossip paper looks loud-mouthed, frivolous, messy, trashy, cheap even if it costs more than it is worth, but it often has something intriguing about it even to many who might not admit it.

A daily Journal with national aspirations gives itself an air of importance, heavily based on tradition, wide appeal, varied interests and playing to the Common Good of us all. Veracity is the guardian angel even if one has to play detective sometimes to find morsels of truth hidden among the forests of lavish advertisements.

A student newspaper, - well - what should a student newspaper look like? That was the question I asked myself...
