

sun before and after totality of eclipse, using a comparison spectrum and employing precisely the same method in determining the velocity from the coronal lines. In this way one can judge as to the reliability of the latter. If it is impossible to use an arc or a spark comparison spectrum, the stronger iodine absorption lines or the narrow strips of continuous spectrum between them may be found suitable in the neighborhood of  $\lambda$  5303.

RALPH E. DE LURY

DOMINION ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATORY, OTTAWA
April 2, 1918