

Justin McCarthy's "Story of an Irishman."

"The river and the sea gave me my playground," says Justin McCarthy, narrating the story of his own life, in his latest book. "I have seen many rivers and harbors in foreign countries, on this side of the Atlantic, and the other, but I have seldom looked upon a scene more fascinating to the eye and mind than that which was so familiar to my boyhood."

With this tribute to the Lee, "the river of my youth," he tells with insatiable simplicity and charm of his early home and his boy companions, who rowed with him in the harbor and out to the tossing sea. "At that time the boys I knew cared for little or anything in the way of sport that was not associated with the river and the sea, with boating and swimming." Football, racing, and cricket had no charm for these Irish lads, and with a word of apology for such indifference their comrades dwell on the long rambles they took together, their scholarly tastes and high ideals. "We could read our Latin and make something of our Greek, most of us could read French, some few Italian, and many of us were already taking to the study of German. I have never met with a set of young men more happily endowed with literary tastes and more given to steady literary culture than that which I can well remember in my native city during those far-off years."

The reason for this culture is not far to seek. It is discerned when this man of letters opens the door of his boyhood's home—a home typical of many others in Cork at that time—and introduces his readers to the family circle. The father was a man of much reading and a distinct literary gift; the mother and sister live always as ideals of womanhood in the memory of the son and brother.

"Looking back as thoughtfully as I can, I recall nothing in the character of either woman which suggests aught but purity, sweetness, utter unselfishness, and loving devotion to duty." The dearly loved sister passed out of life with the close of her twentieth year. The third child, Frank, had a great ambition to become a painter, but at a very early stage of his career he had to work hard for a living. While still very young he emigrated to America and settled down in New York as an office clerk in a wholesale dry goods store, and soon married a charming and gifted American girl. Though he continued painting, the needs of a growing family kept him to the business that supplied their income. He served on the Northern side during the Civil War, and owing to exposure to inclement weather contracted a disease of the lungs that brought his life to an early close.

"I have the most delightful memories of happy days and evenings spent with him and his wife, in a quaint old house, mainly built of stone near to the village as it then was—of Bayonne, in New Jersey," says Mr. McCarthy. A son of this brother, another Justin McCarthy, now holds an honorable position in the state administration of New York.

The schoolmaster who influenced the bent of young McCarthy's mind is honored with a chapter all to himself, as becomes his worth. Few men remember their teachers so gratefully and lovingly.

"My schoolmaster—my only schoolmaster as I may well call him—was a Cork man, named John Goulding, who had been educated for the priesthood, and had, I believe, spent some years in Rome, but owing to ill-health had been compelled to give up all hope of becoming a priest and undergoing the severe labors of that calling. Mr. Goulding must have been some seventy years when I first found a place in his schoolroom. My recollection of him is that his face appeared to be much older than his figure. He was a tall man—stood quite six feet, I think—and his form was one of strength and symmetry, while all his movements were quick, active, and vigorous. His face was clean-shaven, and his head and high forehead were crowned by a mass of thick, white hair which even yet had not had the curl quite taken out of it. The general expression of his face, when he was not speaking, was thoughtful and even melancholy, but when he spoke with animation his eyes lighted up with an inspiring brightness. He was fond of movement, and even when examining his pupils or explaining some subject to them it was his common habit to walk rapidly up and down his room, and indeed he seldom remained seated for any great length of time. Yet there was nothing fussy or even impetuous in his movements—they only illustrated his physical vigor and mental activity, and they never marred the grace and dignity which belonged to him." The methods of this gentle master are described at length by his pupil, who remained under his charge until the necessity of making a living forced him from the schoolroom into a lawyer's office. One shares his regret at having to say good-bye to such congenial associates and environment.

Among the literary and educational institutions of Cork city at that time was the Temperance Institute founded by Father Mathew. Here young McCarthy came often in his evenings to hear lectures and debates. "Father Mathew had a strong confidence in the common desire of young men and boys to cultivate their natural intelligence when the opportunity was placed easily within their reach. . . . He visited the Institute very often himself and talked with the members, always in the friendliest and easiest way, and entered thoroughly into all the ideas and pursuits of the young.

"My own knowledge of Father Mathew," says Mr. McCarthy, "was close and intimate for many years. I was little more than a child when I accepted from him the temperance pledge and was invested with his own silver medal—the badge of the Order. I was a frequent visitor at his house, and he often came to see my father and mother. He was ever ready to lend a helping hand, by advice or personal intervention, when a friend was involved in any sort of difficulty, and in the houses of the very poorest it was noticed that whenever serious trouble came on Father Mathew was sure to appear, like a protecting angel. . . . With all his horror of drunkenness, with his lifelong devotion to the cause of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, Father Mathew had a never-failing patience and pity for the drunkard. . . . It was this very attribute of unflinching sympathy and sweetness that made Father Mathew's influence all but magical over those with whom he had any influence whatever."

With the same close personal touch that makes itself felt in those chapters the writer attracts our attention to his early friends, both boys and books, and through all the delightful reminiscences there is no suggestion of necessity—marring the mind- repose of the Irish youth, though he tells us frankly: "But in the meantime I had to work hard for a living."

Having left the law office to assume the more congenial occupation of a reporter on the Cork Examiner, young McCarthy began work under the most inauspicious conditions. The first work of any importance assigned to him was to travel through the country as a special correspondent to note the devastating effects of the failure of the potato crops. His reminiscences of this period make saddening reading. It is a relief to turn from them to the boy reporter's experiences at the state trials in Clonmel, when in order to get copy to Cork in season for the evening paper, "two of us would charter a jaunting car in Clonmel, drive the greater part of the night and morning to Cork, and, when we got there, sit down without thought of rest, in the newspaper rooms, go on with the writing out of our copy until it was finished, and then start off again as quickly as possible on our return journey to Clonmel.

"I do not think that any of my later experiences of work or travel have left in my mind so intense an impression of hurry, discomfort, and fatigue." The story of the middle and later life of this gifted Irishman is even more interesting than the reminiscences of his youth. For among other things it relates the events of his parliamentary career, and gives personal impressions of the men he met and knew during half a century of public life.

From the Lee to the Mersey, across the Atlantic for "a wandering holiday," amid American scenes and people, and back again to London, Mr. McCarthy takes his way, and is always so entertaining that his readers follow him without protest, even if as averse to the ocean as Dickens' old lady who never was on the water "except on a bridge."—Beatrice Oulton.

If you would have men honor you, keep a pure life and incorruptible associates.

Death of the Father of the Gaelic Revival.

There passed away recently at the Carmelite Abbey, Loughrea, Ireland, a venerable priest, to whose patriotic labors the revival of the Gaelic language and literature may be said to be largely due. The Rev. Elias Nolan, who belonged to the Order Discalced Carmelites, was ordained in 1865 and passed the greater part of his sacerdotal life at the Church of St. Teresa, Clarendon street, Dublin. Soon after his ordination Father Nolan, who, as a native of Galway, spoke Gaelic fluently, founded, with the assistance of a few other Gaelic enthusiasts, the Society for the Preservation of the Irish Language. Over twenty years ago he brought out a prayer book in Irish which had a large sale. He was a zealous but retiring and very pious priest and worked energetically though unobtrusively for the Gaelic revival which is now daily giving evidence of strength, growth and permanence.

PAINFUL RHEUMATISM.

How It Is Caused by Bad Blood, and Why Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Not many years ago doctors thought rheumatism was only a local pain caused by cold or wet in ageing joints and muscles. Now they know that rheumatism is caused by the blood becoming tainted with uric acid from disordered liver and kidneys. This acid eats into the vital organs. It destroys their vitality, contracts the muscles, stiffens the joints and irritates the nerves. Then cold and wet make every bone groan with aching rheumatism. You blame the weather, but the real cause is acid in the blood. The stiffness spreads and the pains grow worse each year until you are a helpless cripple, tortured day and night. Perhaps the disease may spread to the heart—and that means sudden death. You must not neglect rheumatism—but you can't cure it with liniments, plasters or hot cloths. They cannot possibly touch the blood. The only sure scientific cure is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, because they actually make new blood. They sweep out the painful acid, loosen the joints, and muscles, brace up the nerves, and strengthen the liver and kidneys for their work in casting out impurities. This is proved by the thousands of suffering rheumatics who have been made well and strong by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. T. H. Smith, of Caledonia, Ont., is one of these many witnesses. He says: "For a number of years I was badly troubled with rheumatism, and was so crippled up I could scarcely do any work. I tried a number of medicines, but they did not help me. I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised as a cure for rheumatism and decided to try them. Before the third box was gone I found myself much better. I continued to use the pills throughout the winter and they have completely cured me. I got so I could work on the coldest day without a coat and not feel a twinge of the trouble. I think every rheumatic sufferer should promptly take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure men and women who are crippled with lumbago, rheumatism, sciatica, paralysis and even locomotor ataxia, because they actually make new, rich red blood. This new blood sweeps the painful, poisonous impurities out of the system, and puts the whole body into a healthy state. Nothing but good rich blood can do that—and nothing can give you healing blood except Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If the blood is bad the nerves are bad, for the nerves feed on the blood. That is the cause of sleeplessness, nervousness, hysteria, St. Vitus dance, neuralgia, and loss of vitality in men and women. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills faithfully cure these diseases and other blood disorders such as anaemia, biliousness, indigestion, heart troubles, backache, kidney trouble and decline. But you must get the genuine pills. The "something else just as good" medicine which some dealers try to persuade their customers to take never cured anything nor anyone. See that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is on the wrapper around every box. If in doubt write direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be mailed at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

"My husband died last spring," remarked Mrs. Smith, plaintively. "All the doctors' medicines couldn't save him. They tried a post mortem examination, but they didn't do it soon enough to do him any good."

Music has an important influence on the whole of our emotional nature, and indirectly upon expressions of all kinds. He who has once learned the self-control of the musician, the use of "piano" and "forte," each in its right place, when to be lightly swift or majestically slow, and especially how to keep to the key once chosen till the right time has come for changing it, he who has once learnt this knows the secret of the art. No painter, writer, orator, who had the power and judgment of a thoroughly cultivated musician, could sin against the broad principles of taste.

LITTLE LAUGHS.

ONE ON PAPA'S NOSE.
"Your little boy seems to have his father's nose, Mrs. Wibbleton."
"Oh, no. It looks that way because he fell yesterday and bumped it on an iron choo-choo car, poor little pet."

ALL HE GAVE HER.
After the concert was over they all boarded the Clifton and Elm car, each with a new gown and a single action box of bonbons. The announced intention of all was to transfer to Norwood, and to this end the girl in the red hat got six transfers. But the other five changed their minds just before the transfer point and declared themselves in favor of a foraging expedition into the shopping district. Only the girl with the red hat stuck to the original plan and boarded the Norwood car. To the conductor looking for his due she handed the bunch of transfers.

The conductor looked at her and each side of her and all around her. At last he looked into the bonbon box. She was oblivious. Then he spoke, rather haughtily:
"Where are the others?" he inquired.
The girl looked up, startled, and confused for an instant. Then she spoke, rather haughtily:
"That's all he gave me!" she said.

THE BIG STORE WILL CLOSE AT 5.30 P.M. UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
