TWO

THE RETURN OF MARY O'MURROUGH

BY ROSA MULHOLLAND

Author of "The Tragedy of Chris," "Nanno," "Onora," etc.

CHAPTER XII-CONTINUED

WHY WOULDN'T IT BE A COMFORT TO HIM TO SEE HER ?"

After this welcome Mary made the nursing of Owny her daily occupa-tion, such tender charity to the lonely old man filling a great vacancy and hastening the slow footed hours. Every day she took the uphill path to the little farm, which was already showing dolorous signs of its master's absence, and returned in the evening to sleep at Mrs. Darmody's. Grow visit. ing bolder, she seized the opportun when Owny slumbered from weakness, to walk about the yards and fields, observing the things that were going wrong, and striving to discover whether she herself might or might not make an effort towards noments she gathered from Owny information as to the requirements of the season for land and beasts. and quietly took the direction of such matters into her hands. The animals were properly housed and fed as Shan would have had them, the fences were mended, the turf was cut and put to dry, the manure for the potatoes was gathered and stored. People passing by the Sullivan's holding remarked that Owny was "managin' wonderful" without his son, considering his age and illness, and that it was well for him to have O'Murrough' to carry out his orders.

In the late hours of the evening was helpful with knitting and sewing, her superior cleverness and experience giving her a power ad mired and appreciated by the Der-modys. At the same time, her singing of the old songs treasured in her memory during the years of absence was an attraction to the neighbours, and many a one came dropping in for an hour before bedtime to hear Mary O'Murrough lilting the "Poor Croppy Boy" and the "Boys o' Wex-Owny's praise of her voice and Shan's words of delight in it, let fall by the old man, had given her courage to exercise this gift left to tune her still, though her beauty might be gone. If Owny's failure of sight had deprived him of the ability to criti-cise her looks, the keenness of his other faculties had enabled him to stow on her this courage and com fort. As the people grew accustomed to her altered appearance, and be-came acquainted with her in her new character, the painful consciousness of change in herself was less acute, and the cheerful spirit of hope which was natural to her was steadily striving to reassert itself. She used to fear absolutely that the lover's messages which came from Shan were received by one who was in reality a stranger to him. Faint expectation of a return of joy was stirring in her heart when the young year stepped over the shamrocks and daisies from March into April, with feet still rosy from cold, and wet dew, but gleaming in golden sandals of intermittent sunshine.

One evening, when spring seemed to stand a tiptoe on the blue grey hills watching across the world for the coming of summer, with wings half spread ready to fly to meet her Mary came slowly through the fields after her day's attendance on Owny. Nearing the gap in the fence which would lead her by a "short cut." she me on Bess and Miles sitting together on the other side with their backs toward her, their heads just above the level of the "ditch." Thinking to speak to them as she Mary saw that some change had taken place in her. Here was passion instead of patience, energy for action instead of passive fortitude. No use he thought, in striving with her further. "May I go with you, Mary ?" "May I go with you, Father. "I'll go locked hands.

"No, thank you, Father. "I'll go by myself. I want you to tell me the way to go, and the hours, and the rules, and all about it." The Father shut his book and took her into his house, and wrote on a piece of paper all the directions needed for her journey and her threw back his head, gazing at her with a long dazed look. She saw the scare beginning to come back to his eyes; and at the same moment "I'm going to see Shan tomorrow,' the warder with his face to the wall she said to the Dermodys next morning early. "Father Fathy Ridd," said "God bless y', an' I'm glad," said Mas. Dermedy. "It's too hard they Mas. Dermedy. called out gently: "Time's up!" "I'm going," said Mary, and loos were on y' when they were keepin' ened her fingers from Shan's still clinging hold. y' back. 'Good bye now, Shan, and remem-She's wonderful cool over it, said Bess to Anne Bridget after she had gone. "If it was me goin' to see Miles after all them years, I ber whatever comes, you're a free man. If Mary had been drowned goin' to America you would have re-membered her kindly, an' it's what think I would be in bigger excitement.' you have to do now is to remember her that way still-"Few words says most," said Anne Bridget, going on with her knitting. I wish to God she was back, out of The white heat of Mary's passion carried her swiftly over the miles she had to walk, and a short railway valking through fire. Everything of late had tended to make her think less poignantly of her changed appearance, the kindjourney brought her to her destina ness of the neighbours who, after

CHAPTER XIII "IT'S SOMEBODY THAT'S COME IN HER

PLACE"

Shan, sitting in his prison wrapt in gloom, was informed that a visitor wanted to see him. Doggedly obeying the summons, he of all, the encouragement of Father Fahy, who had never seemed to exfollowed the warder, expecting to see no one but the priest, and stared with pect that Shan's love would be killed at first sight of the worn face surprise at the strange face and figure which was now as the face of a strange woman. In the sudden ref a woman awaiting him. Disappointed and resentful at such vulsion of feeling and swift action intrusion on his cruel privacy, he stood before the unwelcome interfollowing on the suggestive words of Miles Donohoe she had forgotten herself wholly, eager only to bring viewer in his felon's clothes, with his shaven head, a dark, hard-faced man comfort, and to make amends for his bitter silence declaring misfor apparent indifference. Now she was wildly aware that a

A sob rose in Mary's throat, and weird and awful thing had hap-pened; that they two who had lived was checked. They gazed at one another for half a minute, he with-out recognition, she striving to see apart in vivid life and faith so long were stricken by incredible death of in him the joyous, happy-go-lucky lover of her early years. Unable to speak, she stretched out the heart in the moment of their meeting. She fled along the prim-rose paths, as if hurrying away from her hands towards him. "It's good of you to come to see elt to be descending on her, obeying me," said Shan, "but I disremember ever seeing you before. Will y kindly tell me who you are?" the mysterious ruler and timekeepe within the brain, that leads hither and thither, preserving order in the

"Shan !" cried Mary; and at the sound of her voice he started. absence of the higher intelligence, and which now carried her to the railway station, seated her in the "Shan, do y' mean that you don't know me

"I mean that I don't. In the name of God, who are you ?" "Shan !" cried Mary again, dry lips were unheard by her; the gold wheel of the evening star turning in and the sweet voice strained out of tune, "am I that changed? Is there nothing of me left at all—that you a river of faint green light that almost drowned the lower hills on the wouldn't know Mary O'Murrough ? horizon, she did not see: the gather. There was dead silence. The waring night-cloud on the brow of Mander whose business it was to be pres gerton, threatening a storm, had no ent during the visits paid to the pris existence to her consciousness. But oner, and who was a sympathiser with by the fall of the dusk she knew, and a believer in Shan, here moved a somehow or other, that she was little further away and turned his back at Killelagh. Anne Bridget was at the door face to the wall. He knew the story of the lovers, and understood the tragedy that was being enacted.

watching for her, and spoke over her shoulder to Bess when she saw her coming. "I was right enough "Mary O'Murrough !" muttered Shan like a man in a dream. "Not when I wished her well back. Here my Mary O'Murrough that went away she's comin', an' I'm feared all isn't to America. She must be dead, an' it's somebody that's come in her well with her !" Mary came in without speaking. and the look in her face struck the

Mary had covered her poor unrecsisters dumb. A startled glance passed between them, and then Bess couldn't be that he wouldn't find comfort in seeing me. I'll make him feel that it was far more pain to me to have to stay away, and that it's glad I am to see him, if he was in a worse place than a prison." The old priest looked at her, and saw that some have a had ther, and the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the or the vision and the course. Some that some that we have a bar ther and the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest the pleading blue eyes reminded him of the rest bound and the rest. The air was sweet Darkness had fallen, the clear dark of a spring night with radiant constellations moving westward, and a mysterious promiac of glory to come in the east. The air was sweat with the breath of hidden growing things increasing in young joy, the burgeoning leaf preparing for the flower, a thymy fragrance exhaling from the invisible bog where myr-iads of tiny exquisitenesses, long of duty in which the Franch hore of her of the vision, and the courage on these brows appealed to his man-liness for admiration. His face softened and he began to tremble, and a man's tears began to rain on their Forgive me, Mary," he said.

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

believe it's you. I'm a nice fella to be denyin' you, an' you never fault-in' me in my felon's clothes. But the sun. Where she went in that dark hour , Mary, Mary, what did they do to 'over there ?" He dashed the tears aside and her hands at the fire, and took her shoes off and bathed her cold feet in warm water. She said nothing, but looked her thanks. Then they, one at each side of her, helped her up to the little loft, she making no object-ion, but slipping out of their hands on her bed, and turning her face away from them to the wall. "I think her heart is broke some way," said Bess, crying, and she and Anne Bridget eat over the fire won-dering as to what had happened. "I think I never could be like that as long as Mike was fond of me." "Why wouldn't be be fond of her?" Anne Bridget, "after all the long years they struy to get one an-The warder was at her side, and he was gone. Her body was out in the cool

Oh, why ?" said Bess; and her thoughts went back to the words pring air again, but her spirit was Miles had spoken at the forge, about the change in Mary's looks, when he said, "A young man would care," and her own heart had rebelled against such possible consequences of a many-years-long engagement. the first surprise, had accepted her in her new character and taken her The next morning Mary in her new character and taken her into their affections with a fresh impulse; the reception given to her of body or of mind, but the Darwere alarmed and sent for a feature of her face; and, not least "She's a state of the state of her face and hand were enough without a feature of her face; and, not least "She's a state of the state of her face and her state of her face and her state of her state o modys She's lyin' there as white as chalk, Father, an' she can't make use of any food. There's fever on her, but I think myself she's wore out," said Anne Bridget. The old man climbed to the loft, and Mary's eyes kindled with grati-tude when she saw him stooping his tall head to come in at the little low entrance to her nest under the rafters.

Now, Mary child, what's this ?' he said taking her limp hand. 'You haven't all the strength you pretend to have. And you don't talk enough. How did you find Shan?"

He had sat down on her American trunk beside her. It was not medicine she wanted, he knew, but an opening for some outpouring of the heart's bitterness. She had told none of her friends where the ailment in her lay. She would tell the priest.

She turned her face towards him, and the old courage came into her eyes as she looked at him.

He didn't know me, Father. He couldn't believe it was me. He train, and put her on the road to Killelagh. Piping of mated birds, doesn't want m

It was what he feared, the thing he had hoped to save her from by try-ing to keep her from going to see Shan in prison ; thinking that after a time of rest reinvigorated health might restore something of her old self in outward appearance, might revive the flower aspect so sweetly important to a woman, the comely which the eye of another de lighteth to look upon. The blow had fallen, and this creature—was she wounded unto death?

He would try her courage further. Now, Mary, don't be talking nonsense. Of course, neither of you could be the very same that you were when you parted. It's not in nature. And Shan's downhearted. and no wonder! You must give him time to come round, the poor fellow! Not want you indeed? If a man ever wanted a woman in this world, reads like that of a saint ; he has had Paris in the palm of his hand. The children in the streets threw arom the invisible bog where myr-iads of tiny exquisitenesses, long dormant, were exulting in returning animation, kindled only vertexter to a parameter of the second se as well as to Country on Guynemer's example, the war's list of heroes Mary herself hardly knew, and no will grow apace. — Catholic Tran-one dared to follow her. When she script. came back the Dermody girls chafed

A PRIVATE OF THE NINETY-THIRD

Florence Gilmore in Rosary Magazin

One afternoon late in the summer of 1916 the Count de Maurisseau was walking with his daughter Agathe in a quiet quarter of Paris. He was a stately old gentleman, with the carriage of a soldier and a stern, sad face which had aged twenty years in the preceding two. She was a fair slender little maid, childlike yet womanly, and almost maternal in her solicitude for her father. They wandered aimlessly back and forth, seeming to have no destination nor any object except to keep away from the crowd-away from away from the crowa—away from every one. Agathe commented brightly on all that they saw, and her father answered gently but abcently. It was evident that he only feigned to be interested in what she said ; as for her, probably she was feigning as much, if not as palpably, as he.

After a while the old Count proposed that they rest on one of the benches in a nearby public square. "I am old and growing feehle. Agathe." he said sadly. "A short valk in the city streets tires me now. If we feel some day that we want to go home what a poor walker I shall find myself among our hills !"

Why, father, you're not old ! We have walked for a long time, and it's very hot to day. I am tired, too," the girl earnestly contradicted.

head. iron bench near the entrance of the square before a soldier, who has crept across it with the help of roughly-made, new crutches, dropped into a seat which faced theirs across the gravel walk. Agathe watched him pityingly, and seeing one of his crutches slip and fall as he put it aside, she darted forward and placed it beside the other. "Thank you. You are very kind," the young officer said, raising his cap, and by voice and manner betraying that he was a gentleman.

The Count and he then exchanged some commonplace remarks; but after a few comments the old man began to talk to his daughter about their plans for the next day and the convalescent soldier leaned back wearily and forgot them in the thought of his mother, alone in her distant chateau and of a dark eyed girl whose heart was in his keeping. No more would have passed be-tween him and them if an ambulance had not come slowly down the street and stopped before a hospital which faced the square. Agathe watched as three stretchers were carried up the steps and through the broad door. way. Big tears rolled down over her sweet, round little face, and she bit her lips to keep from crying outright. The young officer's heart, made wounded men. Most of us get well, mademoi-saddest and the most heroic. thing that your daughter said a few moments ago reminded me of a piti-able story which no one in the world knows except myself-and perhaps the chaplain of our regiment

"No one will ever know it. I prom ised not to tell, and never will, unless as I am going to tell you now, men tioning names of neither people places. I gave my word to keep the secret, and I will, although I often wonder if—if I did well?

Agathe was interested at once, and her father tried to be. The officer paused, staring thoughtfully at the gravel walk, before he began, very, very slowly :

"Our regiment—the Ninety-third —lost heavily in the Battle of Marne and along the Aisne, and among the men sent to fill the gaps in our ranks was one whom I had known at college, a brilliant, attractive fellow, the on of an old and aristocratic house. I couldn't believe my eyes when I first saw him, for he-you see, he had been a lieutenant in the artillery, and-and we who knew him could hardly believe it when we heard that —at the very beginning of the Battle of the Marne he played-cowardand deserted.

'How he managed to slip away and to keep himself hidden I can't imagine. But he did. Every one in our division heard the story, so you can understand my amazement a year later, I recognized him n the new privates in our regi ment "He saw that I knew him-as of course I did, since we had studied and fought and larked together for years at college ! He came straight to me, and said bluntly : Well, are you going to give me up? There's a price on my head, you know. Not if you behave. What do you take me for ?' I answered gruffly, I am afraid. "I don't know why I spoke as did, unless because he, who had looked so worn and sad that some-how it was all I could do to keep from making a baby of myself. We should have hated anything like that. "After a time he told me, little by The Count smiled and shook his ad.

knew what he was doing. After wards, heart sick and disgraced, ashamed to hold up his head, he thought of giving himself up. He had disgraced his people, and knew He that they would never forgive him.

"He could not forgive himself. He foresaw that as long as he lived he could never be anything better than a fugitive. But he came to the conclusion that it would be braver to do what he could for France than weakly to take the line of least resistance. So he offered himself for the army. Said he was an American. He spoke English abominably, but the recruiting officers did not speak it at all, so that made no difference. He was accepted and assigned to our regiment." The old Count was listening now. "A private — to do something for France ?" he echoed.

Yes, and he bore himself like a hero-fought with all his might and apparently with no thought of danger. He offered himself for every hazardous bit of work and did it coolly. But he wasn't the boy I had known. He was changed— changed! He had become quiet and reserved, and seemed to prefer to be alone. With me he was always offish, in spite of all I could do to show how deeply I respected him. Our chaplain was his only friend, very tender by all the suffering he had seen and shared, was touched by her sympathy for the unknown wounded men strange—and very sad !" The soldier stopped, considering his story finished, but the Count was FOY, KNOX & MONAHAN BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES, Etc Hon. J. J. Foy, K.C., A. E. Knox, T. Louis Monshan Cable Address : "Foy Telephones (Main 794 Main 798 Offices: Continental Life Building CORNER BAY AND RICHMOND STREETS H L. O'ROURKE, B.A. (Also of Ontario Board , O. Box 2093 H L. O'EOUARA S. (Also of Ontario Esr) BARRISTER, SOLICITOR, NOTARY Money to Loan Saite 5, Board of Trade Buildins 231 Eighth Avenue West CALGARY, ALBERTA DAY, FERGUSON & CO. ames E. Day hn M. Fer-eph P. 7 Valy Ferguson 26 ADELAIDE ST. WEST Walsh TOPOTO TORONTO, CANADA Reilly, Lunney & Lannan BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, NOTARIES CALGARY, ALBERTA DENTISTS DR. BRUCE E. EAID Room 5, Dominion Bank Chambers Richmond and Dundas Sts. Phone 5660 Funeral Directors John Ferguson & Sons 180 KING ST. The Leading Undertakers & Embal Open Night and Day Telephone - House 373 Factory 548

> E.C. Killingsworth FUNERAL DIRECTOR Open Day and Night 583 Richmond St. Phone 397

Gerald de Lacey's Daughter An Histories Romance

By Anna T. Sadlier

NO Cathe lie writer of fiction in English is IN more widely known and none more descreedly popular than the author of shis book, which will probably add more to her book, which will probably add more to be fame than anything bearing her name. For the time of her story, she has chosen one of the most interesting periods in this country's history, that immediately following the accession to the English throne of William of Orange, a time of bitter memories for those of the Faith, filled with deadly persecution and with giorious heroism. It is a strong virile story, brimful of action, and highly dramatic in parts. The love scenes are charming. Every Catholic should read in it until you reach its surprising climax . . .

Fascinating

Entertaining Illuminating

AN OPEN SECRET les Muredach" is the pen-name Monsignor Francis Clement ley, the distinguished American ate.

$1.25 Net

Postage 10c. Extra

The Catholic Record

LONDON, ONT.

A BSORBINE

Will reduce Inflamed, Strained, Swollen Tendons, Ligaments,

Swollen Tendons, Ligaments, or Muscles. Stops the lameness and pain from a Splint, Side Bone or Bone Spavin, No blister, no hair gone and horse can be used. $2.50 a bottle at druggists or delivered. De-scribe your case for special instruc-tions and interesting horse Book 2 R Free. ABSORBINE, JR., the antiseptic liniment for mankind, reduces Strained, Torn Liga-ments, Swollen Glands, Veins or Muscless Heals Cuts, Sores, Ulcers. Allays pain. Price 1.25 shorts dearport delivered. Book Stars, Friderey Tra

SEPTEMBER 14, 1918

TORONTO

Phone Main 6249. After Hours: Hillcrest 881

Society of St. Vincent de Paul

Bureau of Information Special Attention Given to Employment Cast off Ciothes Always in Demand 25 Shuter St

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

Office Hours 9 to 4

arrested by a few words from Miles in the suddenly raised voice of one who is uttering an opinion main-tained against all contradiction.

self from more sorra that Shan is never faded by a line or a tint, of a keepin' her away. Why wouldn't it face that had been the companion of be a comfort to him to see her ?"

Mary stood still, gazing with eyes that did not ϵ ee, and ears that heard with laughter, dimpled cheeks the no more. After a minute's interval colour of the wild hedge roses. she turned on her steps, and went That was Mary O'Murrough who went from him, and he had been across the fields by another footpath.

A storm of passion was in her heart, remorse for her own stupid told that she had come back to him Who was this worn woman weeping before him, who had taken her name and was claiming her identity ? obedience, disgust at her cowardly patience, anger even at Father Fahy's His eyes, wistfully full of the win misunderstanding counsels. mild. Would the night ever pass, and the ning vision of memory, closed on it a Would the night ever pass, and the might moment, and opened again, hard and moment, and opened again, hard and start at once to bring comfort to unbelieving. Shan in his prison? O wicked "Shan" said Mary, uncovering her meekness! O mistaken submission face with a movement of despair, ed as cruel only to herself, but which in reality was punishment of an-other already so undeservedly afflict-ed. Heanwhile, Anne Bridget was try-if all's gone like my young years and my good looks, and you can't care about me any more, can't y' speak to me like a friend; for I was true to ed. Meanwhile, Anne Bridget was try-ing to salve a wound without know-ing where the blow had fallen. "It was hard on y' goin' to see him there. Y' ought to been bidda-you and Inever done you any wrong? I'm not going to stand in your way patience against the eagerness of her desire had been swept away by a word, and next morning at cock crow would have seen Mary on her way to the County Gaol, had she not re-membered that on one certain day of the month only could Shan be visit-back to where I come from at once, ed. The day was near, but a fur-ther pause in her present state of without drawing a breath. But even if your heart's as cold to me and as mind appeared unendurable. fast shut as the prison gates. I could-

On the evening before the longed. for morning, she went to look for out of it. I'll go now, and I'll Father Fahy, and found him walking ognised face, the face of love that bad brought no joy, and was weep-ing. Shan was staring over her head, and away beyond her at the distance, across the years, looking at put a hand on Mary's shoulder and said softly : "Of course, it is only to save her- the vivid picture never obliterated, down now. Y' walked a lot, an' not a bit to eat since mornin'. Anne Bridget, will y' make a cup o' tea l' Anne Bridget was already prepar his fidelity, a countenance rounded inga meal, and Mary, rousing herself thanked them, and made an effort to eat a little, while Bess went out to look for her mother and to unbur then herself by some expressions of > her pity. What happened at all, at all ?' she asked. She was well enough made up in her mind what it would be like to see him in prison.'

under the cloud of doom which she bleating of lambs newly yeaned,

There's nothing like seein' a thing to make y' feel it's thrue,' said her mother. "I hope he was glad to see her. She's come through enough, poor crature, without ble to the priest. Shan wouldn't be like Shan, in that place. An' 'twould make a man wild to be there to meet y' comin' home, an' he doin' nothin' to deserve it."

"He didn't complain," said Mary, finding her voice. "No, he wouldn't. He's a man," said Anne Bridget. "An' oh, but I'm sure he was terrible glad to see n't turn my back on y' till I see you you. Anne Bridget went on, encouraged out of it. I'll go now, and I'll be prayin' for you. There's pretty girls about Killelagh, and some o' them will make you happy yet. But won't will make you happy yet. But won't spiration as to the true state of spiration as to the true state of doesn't he want you now ?"

A little colour came into Mary's face as she looked wistfully, eagerly, above a whisper, but trying to "Let me take off your hat ; an' sit smile at this comforter.

And take my advice, child, and get up and walk in the mountain air, and eat and drink everything you can. Goat's milk will make you strong, and that will do more good to Shan than all your fretting. Goat's milk, remember, Mary—and prayer to the good God that made to be silent. you both Down he went on his stiff, rheu so vividly that the Count be matic knees, and Mary's pale lips moved as she followed the supplicat ing words of his prayer for her. His blessing and his hand on her head at man. departure soothed her wonderfully and after he was gone she fell asleep.

In a few days she was found to be nuch better, and was soon at work again, nursing Owny, and looking after the Sullivans' little farm.

TO BE CONTINUED

THE IDOL OF AVIATORS

No one has yet appeared among the heroes of the air to whom the dauntless Guynemer has been forced to take second place. His name is victories or defeats, but regarding the care of the wounded, the hardstill uttered with unconcealed reverence by American aviators no less than by his own countrymen. Nor is his incomparable record in dis-The Count had fallen into one posing of seventy five enemy planes of his frequent sad reveries and did the only reputation that his admir- not heed the young people. Quick ers dwell upon. A young American who aspires to emulate the late "ace was about to arouse him by encent Father Fahy, and found him walking up and down the road before his cot tage, reading his breviary.prayin' for you. There's pretty girls about Killelagh, and some o' them to say cheerful words. She had become so fond of Mary that her altered looks were forgotten, and no inspiration as to the true state of things had warned against the dan-grout wouldn't?"to say cheerful words. She had become so fond of Mary that her alter-od looks were forgotten, and no inspiration as to the true state of things had warned against the dan-grout wouldn't?"to note his change of mood, Agathe was about to arouse him by suggest ing that hey had better start towards their ponsion when the stranger aroopos of a remark of hers but son shees still in the clasp of it, and at the same moment the yearning sweetness of the voice, with its me the trouble and the pain. Itto asy cheerful words. She had become so fond of Mary that her alterolos were forgotten, and no inspiration as to the true state of things had warned against the dan-grout wouldn't?"to onte his change of mood, Agathe was about to arouse him by suggest ing that they had better start towards aroopos of a remark of hers but solut houghtfully:Count sail solut solution and with the chaplain of the contessed and would never fly until he had first uttered a prayer. The French prisst here preached an excellent sermon over him. The life of Guynemerto note his change of mood, Agathe was about to arouse him by suggest ing that they had better start towards arouse in with the chaplain of the Ninety-third.

" I feel certain that he does," the chaplain said simply.
But the Count said not a word.

selle." he said comfortingly.

ile," he said comfortingly. "I hope so," she answered, hardly ot satisfied. After a thoughtful silence, he said; "And now? Where "He was fatally, injured while

Then the young officer began to helping to rescue some wounded men talk to her father, not seeing, or in his loneliness not wishing to see, that the old man had no interest in who were exposed to the enemy's fire and died before we could get him to a hospital. We buried him in the little military cemetery at Rheims, strangers and would have preferred and-and I hate to think that I can In answer to a prefunctory question never tell. I promised him that I would not. I helped to lay him to of the Count's, he said that he had been wounded during the bombardrest, and I myself marked the little cross above his grave. I marked it. ment of Rheims, and described it all interested, in spite of himself, old 'Our boy.' That is what his mother had always called him. I knew because I used to see her letters though the story already was to the ears and heart of every Frenchwhen we were at college. She died three years ago, so she never knew. He asked a number of intelligent He had forgotten Agathe for the questions, using technical terms in moment, but suddenly the girl hid her face on her father's shoulder, a familiar way which proved that he, too, had seen active service. and sobbed uncontrollably. When the young officer said as much,

"Little one, your heart is too tender," he said feeling that he had the Count answered shortly : "I fought in the War of '70." He been tactless to tell so sad a story, and a little uncomforttable lest in doing so he had been untrue to his did not add that he had received the Cross of the Legion of Honor, and nothing would have induced him to mention his name—a name famous in the annals of France, and once his promise. Agathe continued to cry as if her heart were breaking, and after a little hesitation and a word of farewell to greatest pride. Agathe asked a few girlish quesher father, he rather sheepishly tions, not about military tactics or slipped away. The Count was patting her tenderly on the cheek, and when the soldier was gone she raised her face to his Oh, daddy, you'll forgive him now !

God bless our boy !" the old Count said solemnly, by way of

'I feel certain that he does," the PERFUMES

Watch our Ads. in Local Dailies Thursday

 $1.25 a bottle at dealers or delivered. Book "Evidence" free.
W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F., 299 Lymans Bidg., Montreal, Can Absorbine and Absorbine, Jr., are made in Canada. 117 Yonga St.

