are, or have been, found in other places settled by Norsemen, as, for instance, Jersey, Normandy, North Holland, Orkney, Shetland and Iceland. Cattle of the same type are still found in Northern Europe, from Norway to the North of Russia. In all probability they are descended from the hornless cattle of the Scythians referred to by Herodotus, and they may be traced back either to Ancient Egypt or Asia. The modern hornless breeds, by crossing with other breeds, have lost nearly every character possessed by their ancestors, excepting their hornlessness. The Jerseys, on the other hand, have retained their shapes, milking qualities, many of them have retained the color—a steely or slaty grey, sometimes called light dun—but they have accepted the gift of horns from some other race.

SWINE IN AMERICA

The most complete work of its kind that we have yet had the pleasure of reviewing. That is our opinion of "Swine in America," fresh from the presses of the Orange-Judd Company, New York, and written by F. D. Coburn, Secretary of the Kansas Department of Agriculture. It is a volume of 700 pages, well printed and rather more appropriately illustrated than the usual run of livestock books. When we say it is appropriately illustrated, we mean that the hundred and thirty-odd engravings in the work have been selected with the idea of illustrating, properly, the matter in the book, not only are typical representatives of the various breeds of swine in America shown, but, in addition, the numerous illustrations of hog houses, yards, feeding methods, troughs, fodder plants, etc., etc., bring out more clearly than written descriptions, however well those descriptions were executed, the ideas which the author desires to convey to his readers.

As regards matter, it might be said that while this has been written largely from the viewpoint of United States conditions, there is in every chapter, except, perhaps, that one dealing with corn as a hog food, something instructive for Canadian hog raisers. This is true particularly of such chapters as those dealing with the breeding of swine, the selection of boar and sow, the weaning of pigs, pasturing and soiling, alfalfa for swine, wheat, hog houses and pens, castration, the most common diseases of swine, and others of like nature. Take, for example, the chapter on alfalfa as a swine food. T. D. Coburn, of Kansas, is recognized in the United States as the first authority on alfalfa growing. He has brought to this work a vast amount of knowledge, gained from experience and observation in the growing and feeding of alfalfa in the leading alfalfa State in the Union. He wrote a book on alfalfa some years ago that is the recognized authority still on this subject in America, and as we are interested in this country in the question of hog-raising on such feeds as alfalfa, rape, roots, pasture and forage crops generally, an authoritative treatise on the whole subject is particularly valuable.

Another part of interest is the department on hog diseases. Our experience in agricultural journalism leads us to believe that the average hog raiser has not enough information at hand on the treatment of the common diseases that affect his stock, or understands the best means of preventing these common disorders. Anyone who reads regularly the "Questions and Answers" department of this paper will notice that seventy-five per cent. of the questions asked on hog-raising relate to some disorder with which the inquirer's stock is afflicted. For this reason a work treating of this phase of hog-raising should have a place in every farmer's library. This, and the other chapters mentioned, make the book a valuable guide and work of reference on the subject.

"Swine in America" may be ordered through this office at the publisher's price, $2.50 per copy.
