(FROM QUE ON CORRESPONDENT.) Lowron, January 31, 1851.

If is announced that the approaching Session of Parliament will be opened by Her Majesty in person; and that in the Lords the Address, is answer to the Speech from the Throne, will be moved by Lord Effingham, and reconded by Lord Overstone; whilst in the Commons the same duties will whilst in the Commons the same duties will be performed respectively by the Marquis of Kildure, the sidest son of the Duke of Leinster, and Mr. Pets, the eminent builder, who, by the way, is a Dissenter. The commencement of the Legislative labors is generally looked to with interest; there are always plenty of abuses to redress, and errors to recent. Prejudices, opinions, political schemes of all kinds and descriptions, fears, hopes, petitions, threats, hints, claims, prophecies, and mands, muitiply during the fleeting recess; and by the time the two Houses are suma the despatch of business, the work to be accomplished has become so extensive, that depetch is ossible. During the present recess, Parlia-itary stock has accumulated most unexpectedly and most extensively. Economies, Theology, Representation, besides a list of minor matters are all pressing for immediate discussion. Min sters will certainly have their hands full, and never, since their accession to office, have they had less chance of giving anything like general satisfaction than they have in the approaching Session. Their very strength will embareas them. Their surplus revenue, which is a matter of such sanguine congratulation, is claimed by every one, and thousands are expected to go the length of millions. It is pretty well understood however, new Sir Charles Wood intends to dispose

You will see that letters have been necessed from the gallant officers composing the expedition in search of Sir John Franklin by vay of Bahring's Straits. Although no tidings have been received of the missing chips, so has all gots well to secure a thorough examination of the various points where Sir John Franklin may have taken refinge. Captain McClure, in the Investigator, proposes to pash on to Bank's Land, which, if he accomplishes, he intends thoroughly to examine, and afterwards, if practicable, to get to the northward of Melville Island, and to resume the search along its shores and adjacent islands so long as the mivigation can be carried on, wintering in the last of the part of the President, after some heaitstion on the part of the President, after some heatter and the part of along its shores and adjacent islands so long as the survey of the president, may gation can be carried on, wintering in the best place he can find. Next spring, he will despatch parties of his crew, with for y days' provisions, in different directions, in hopes of finding Sir John in some of the small bays and inlets around. Euppose, these return without finding anything, and the vessel is liberated on the lat of August next, he will then much on to the lat of August next, he will then much on to the lat of August next, he will then much on to the lat of August next, he will then much on to the same finding anything. the 1st of August next, he will then push on to plan of naming an extra-Parliamentary Cabinet Wellington Inlet, assuming that channel communicates with the Polar Sea, and search both its shores, unless he finds that it has been done previously by Captain Austin's party, and endeavor to pane by Captain Austin's party, and endeavor to pene-trate in the direction of Jones' Sound, carefully examining every place that is practicable. Should Captain McClure effect all this, and find no traces

The return of the American Mail Steam Atlante, to Cork, after having proceeded 1800 miles on her outward voyage across the Atlantic bas occasioned a good deal of remark. She broke the shafts of her engines, and, after an ineffectual attempt to make Hermuds, was compelled to put back. I have had my fears for some time past that some serious accident would happen. The two rival Companies, professing the greatest regard for each other, have been fighting in the papers for the last few months, and it was generally predicted that by urging
