FUN FOR THE PLEBE.

A WEST POINT CADET WHO KNOCKED OUT ALL COMERS.

He Whipped Thirty Yonks of the Yearling Class and Then Finished Up Every Man of the First Class Who Called Him Out.

The hazers of West Point ran up against a "hard proposition" when they encountered John Patrick Sullivan of Louisiana. He is the youth of muscle and brawn who as a plebe whipped 30 of the "yearling" class and every cadet of the first class who called him out. He was so busy with fights that sometimes he had as many as four in one day, and he never lost a battle. He was the best "scrapper" the Military Academy ever saw and as a plebe used to whip upper class men as fast as they appeared before him.

Sullivan was "found in fault" in January, 1897. "Found in fault" means "found deficient in mathematics." He therefore left the academy, but the remembrance of his progress still remains there. In his "plebe class" he was of equal weight with him and whipped them all, sometimes meeting as many as four. Then the first class was weighed in. Sullivan met the "rapid plebe," on a matter of the "rapid plebe," and kept the doctors at the hospital busy. Scarcely a day but some man reported at the hospital with a disfigured face which he had received by "running into a tree." Before July was over Sullivan was no longer the "rapid plebe," but the "terrible plebe."

He was a rawboned youth from Louisiana and eminently built for fighting. He was not a quarrelsome fellow by any means, but his name and his prowess caused him a lot of trouble. It was a case of fight with him as soon as he went into barracks as a "beast." Several years ago Sullivan was the customary visitor and asked the usual questions. When the festive yearlings found that his name was Sullivan, they asked, "Are you John L. Sullivan?"

"No," replied the candidate; "I am John P. Sullivan."

After the usual instructions about the use of "air" and "water" the yearling asked, "Can you fight, sir?" was the reply.

"But don't you know that you have got to fight to keep up the reputation of your name?"

Sullivan said he would fight if obliged to do so, and as soon as he had passed his preliminary examination and was in "plebe camp" his fighting days began. The first man who called him "devil" him on his first day in barracks was the first one he whipped. It can be imagined that he fought his first fight at the Point with a good heart. After that he was knocked out 30 of the yearling class. After Sullivan had beaten all comers he was not deviled by the upper class men and in the fall was given a place on the football team.

Sullivan got his share of hazing at first and took it without a murmur. Once they told him to stand at the door of his room and whistle long and loud. He never resented any of the usual tests which were applied to cadets, but the readiness with which he accepted them and the rapidity with which he put his opponents out of commission were traits which made the upper class men rather wary of deviling him.

The youth from Louisiana was respected at the Point for his physical qualities, even if the academic board had doubts as to his mathematical ability. Perhaps he would have done better in "math" if he had not had so much to do. It is rather difficult to "bone math" and whip four upper class men a day. Sullivan's name is one which will long be a consolation to the plebes among the fourth class men at the academy, for the days when the upper class men were so strong at the Point, and it is always a consolation to plebes to be able to tell tales of the physical prowess of another plebe, even though he has fallen from the ranks. Many officers now in the service also are proud of the fighting ability of John Patrick Sullivan.

Plebe Sullivan was tall, muscular and well built, with not an ounce of useless flesh on him. Every movement of his body denoted strength and agility, and those who felt the grip of his big hands thought their fingers had been in the jaws of a vise.

When he had his first fight, no particular attention was paid to the affair, as the average plebe does not know much about fighting, and it was taken for granted that the yearling who had called him out would get the better of the battle. But Sullivan returned to camp without a scratch, while the yearling, with the help of several of his classmates, went to the hospital for rest, recuperation and repairs. Then it was that the yearling class got together and began to call out the "rapid plebe" one after the other. It was necessary, according to the code, to take the plebe's consent out of him, and so the series of fights began which resulted so disastrously to the upper class men. After he had whipped every man of his weight in the yearling class it was decided at a class meeting that he should be let alone. It was then that the first class took a hand, with no better results than the yearlings. But, alas, Sullivan could not "get away" with mathematics as easily as he could with "scrapping" cadets, and his career at the Point was brief, though never dull.

More Work to Do.

An old couple in the west of Scotland removed to a large town, and the husband bought an alarm clock to wake him in the morning, as he had to go some distance to his work.

A few weeks afterward the couple got two young men as lodgers, who asked to be awakened at the same time as themselves.

When the husband was winding up the clock that night, his wife said to him: "Now, Jock, ye'll have to gie the clock a gude winding the night. Ye see it has two mair to waken the mornin'—London Spare Moments."

Pleased to Meet Him.

"You always look pleased when you meet Jibbs."

"Yes, he once tried to cheat me and couldn't."

A majority of persons take years off their lives through eating too much while all the time they are under the impression that they are indeed being strictly moderated.

THE MOUTH BREATHER.

Why He Is Always Tired and Depressed in the Morning.

Few people realize what an important organ the nose is. It is the first of the organs of respiration, and unless its functions are well performed the whole breathing process is deranged. The nostrils are not open cavities with smooth walls through which the air passes in and out, as it would through a rubber tube. They are divided into several compartments by bony projections covered with mucous membrane, and the volume of air entering is broken up into several streams, so that all of it comes in contact with the lining membrane.

This warm and moist membrane catches the dust and other impurities and warms the air so that it will do no harm when coming in contact with the more delicate membrane in the bronchial tubes and lungs.

When the nose is stopped up from any cause, one must breathe through the mouth, and if this is continued for any length of time the general health will inevitably suffer.

The mouth itself suffers first. The mucous membrane loses its moisture and becomes inflamed. The air is neither warmed nor purified, and it irritates the lining membrane of the air passages all the way down to the lungs, so that a condition of sluggish inflammation is excited.

But the general effects are more serious than the local. One who has a mouth breather never gets enough air. During the day he suffers less in this respect, for the nerve centers are more active and force the respiratory muscles to act more energetically, but at night this vigilance is relaxed, the amount of inspired air is greatly reduced and all the tissues suffer for want of oxygen. For this reason the mouth breather always feels tired and out of sorts in the morning.

The mind suffers as well as the body, and mouth breathing children are almost always backward in their studies.

The question of the cause of mouth breathing, or rather of nasal obstruction, on which the mouth breathing depends, must be reserved for another article. As a rule, it is easily found on examination by the physician and can be removed without difficulty. What we would insist upon here is the absolute necessity of its early removal.

A child who always breathes with open mouth and whose voice has a nasal twang should be examined and treated at the earliest possible moment, for the longer the trouble exists the worse it is for the child mentally, morally and physically.—Youth's Companion.

THEATRICAL SALARIES.

What the Stage Favorites of a Century Ago Were Paid.

What were the favorite actors of a century ago paid? In 1801 there was only one theater of consequence in New York city, the Park theater, which was located on Park street, near Beaman street, in the vicinity of what is now the entrance to Brooklyn bridge.

The Park theater then had a stock company of 25 members, and, if historians of that day are to be relied upon, performances of a very high grade of merit were given. These performances attracted all the fashionable world of that day. Here are the names of the players and their salaries:

Mr. Hodgkinson	...	$50
Mr. Cooper	...	25
Mr. Melmoth	...	25
Mr. Hallam	...	25
Mr. Bannister	...	10
Mr. Jefferson	...	10
Mr. Martin	...	10
Mr. Tyler	...	10
Mr. Fox	...	10
Mr. Hallam	...	10
Mr. Hogg	...	10
Mr. Perkins	...	10
Mr. Lee	...	10
Mr. Seymour	...	10
Master Stockwell	...	4

What would the matinee idols and popular comedians of today think of such compensation for their labors?

John Hodgkinson, who was one of the first lessees of the Park theater, which was opened on Jan. 20, 1792, had been a member of the John Street theater stock company. He was born in Manchester, England, in 1767. Hodgkinson appeared with success in England before he came to this country. Low comedy was his forte, but he was a remarkably versatile actor and great favorite. Ireland says:

"He played tragedy, genteel and light comedy, opera and pantomime with alacrity, most equal ability, and his desire to monopolize the heroes in almost every department caused many and bitter quarrels with his professional brethren."

Mrs. Hodgkinson, who was formerly Miss Brett of the Bath (England) theater, was the daughter of a singer at Covent Garden. She was a soprano and, according to Ireland, "an excellent and versatile actress."—Exchange.

Royal Treasure and Trash.

Probably the queerest aggregation of treasure and trash is in the shah's palace in Teheran, Persia. Here, in the gallery of art, side by side, are hung a picture issued by thread manufacturers whose trademark has gone all over the world and a beautiful painting by a well known Italian artist, the gift of a sovereign. On a sideboard in the peacock throneroom are exhibited a dozen nickel plated knives, forks and spoons. In this room, on the right of the famous peacock throne, which was valued by the late Sir Richard Burton at $25,000,000, stands a splendidly carved mahogany table. On the table repose, with an air of oriental elegance, an empty cognac bottle. No one knows what the bottle means or who put it there—that is, no one but the shah, and no one is asking him about it.

The Minister's Answer.

A certain editor who went on a vacation left a minister in charge of his paper. A day or two later a letter from "a wayback" subscriber came which read: "You know well I paid my subscription the last time I was in your town. If I get any more such letters, I will come down and maul hell out of you."

The minister answered, "I have been trying to maul that thing out of the editor for ten years, and if you really come down and maul it out of him then my dear sir, I have 20 members of my church you can operate on."—Exchange.
