Uncle Peter

By EDITH M. DOANE

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

Thomas Coleman, cold, reserved, ambitious, sat at the head of the heavy library table. Beside him his pretty, fashionable wife drummed softly with her finger tips on the polished mahog-any and watched her husband sideways out of her dark, inscrutable eyes.

The other Coleman, Elizabeth, stood by the window, a letter with a queer South American postmark in her hand. "Poor, lonely old man" she said softly. "Listen, Tom. 'I'm kind of hun-gerin' for the sight of a face that belongs to me,' and this—'I jest want to get acquainted with my own folks' isn't that pathetic?"

"'I ain't beholden,' she went on, scanning the letter swiftly. 'I don't ask no favors, but I'd kind of like to feel that them that is to have the little something I leave will have a kindly feelin' for the old man who scraped it all together, when he's gone."

She looked up with swift comprehen-sion at the tense attitude of the other two. "You do not suppose that 'little something can be a fortune, do you?" she said half nervously.
"It might be as well," Thomas Coleman suggested, "to acquire more defi-nite information concerning it before ah—committing ourselves." Thomas Coleman was a man whom h.s friends called "level headed." "May be nothing in it," he added.

"But if there should be?" suggested his wife, still drumming softly on the polished wood. Only his wife knew how fearfully Thomas Coleman had been hampered in money matters "Whether there is or not, he has a claim upon us," put in Elizabeth, hotly. "He's a poor, lonely old man—our father's brother." Thomas Coleman raised a remon strating hand. "Be reasonable, Eliza-We do not know him. It is not to be supposed that we can offer hin lack was that of money. She confronted them now indignant-"It is a shame!" she flashed, looking like an enraged princess, with her flaming cheeks and heavy, red gold halming cheeks and heavy, red gold halr. "A lonely old man begs for affection. He freely offers us all he has. Be it much or little, it is all. In return you weigh and appraise and calculate. Oh," she broke off, "I am ashamed of you. Let us make him honestly welcome, whatever he brings."

And in that first day, while the others held aloof, it was Elizabeth who, in warm hearted, impulsive fashion welcomed the little old man enveloped in a shaggy greatcoat, who regarded his "own folks" with shrewd blue eyes which looked out rather wistfully from under the shaggy brows.

On the second day Uncle Peter approached Thomas Coleman.
"Some mornia' when it's convenient I'd like to go downtown with you. I want to find Willie Moore's office," he want to find Willie Moore's office," he added apologetically.

Thomas Coleman looked up quickly.

"William T. Moore, the lawyer?"

The old man nodded, "Willie Moore's father and me was boys together, and I always had considerable confidence in Willie. I've got a few papers I'd kinder like him to keep," he added.

The few papers turned out to be $5,000,000 worth of shares in the El Juarez gold mines.

For six months he was the recipient of every attention which the solicitude of his beloved and happily surprised nephew and his wife could devise;

n, one day, like a bolt from a clear sky, the storm burst.

The El Juarez mines were flooded!

The rumor started in the Mining Exchange when stock that had been $150 was quoted at $25 a share; then the flaunted great headlines of "Panic In Wall Street!" "El Juarez Mines Flood-ed!" Later the report was confirmed, and by 3 o'clock the shares of the El Juarez mines were not worth the paper on which they were written. The old man to whom the mines had been a lifelong companion stared desperately at the flaunting headlines, then, covering his face with his rough, worn hand, gave way to his grief with the abandon of a child.

"Them mines was jest like my own child," he sobbed. "I knowed they wasn't actin' up jest right when I left 'em, but I never suspicioned they'd fetch up where they hev," and again tears flowed unrestrainedly down the

Disappointed, imbittered, almost mad dened by the loss of sorely needed wealth just within his grasp, Thomas Coleman broke the silence.

"Don't worry," he said coldly. "You are not too old yet to find some suitemployment."

Uncle Peter looked up in astonishment, then as the meaning of the cruel words dawned upon him his face went suddenly and pitifully white.

"I kinder thought if I was ever in trouble I could depend on my own folks." The old voice quavered piteously as the curtains parted and Eliza beth entered the room. Sweeping past the others, she took the old man's hands in her young ones.

"I have come to take you home with me," she said simply.

"But the mines," he said unsteadily.
"Never mind. There isn't much room in my little flat, but there's a loving elcome, and soon"—she blushed hap pily-"there will be a little house in the suburbs."

"But how about that young feller you're goin' to marry?" questioned the old man doubtfully. "He told me to come for you," answered Elizabeth, with proud, happy eyes.

The old man rose and, still holding Elizabeth's hand, faced Thomas Cole-man and his wife, man and his wife.
"You said I wasn't too old to find sultable employment," he said, "and I ain't. I've found it. I'm goin' to buy that house out in the suburbs, and it won't be no little one, either. An' I'm goin' to set the young feller up in whatever business he wants to be set up in, an', what's more, I'm goin' to give Elizabeth a million dollars in government bonds fer her weddin' gift. I ain't through with the other million yet, but when I am she an' her chil dren gits it. My money wan't in them mines. I told Willie Moore how they wuz actin' up, an' he took it out fer me three months ago. I nin't denyin' I felt bad about 'em, but 'twarn't the money I wuz thinkin' of.

"No," he repeated, "I warn't thinkin' of the money, an' "—he patted her hand lovingly—"neither wuz Elizabeth, but," he added slowly, with a shrewd glance at Thomas Coleman's white, baffled face, "It kinder looks as though there's others that wuz."

One of the Best Loved. Princess Victoria, who attended the coronation of King Heakon and Queen Maud, is one of the best-loved members of the Royal family, says M. A. P. Her-devotion to her parents is touching in-the extreme, and everyone about the court describes her as an angel and a court describes her as an angel and a perfect peacemaker. Her health has always been delicate, and she neither rides nor shoots, but all the same is the most athletic of our princesses. She has a great liking for tennis and golf, is a good cyclist, and often rides a Beeston Humber which was given her on her birthday by His Majesty the King. Reading, both prose and poetry, occupies much of her spare time, and Browning is said to be her favorite poet. And Princess Victoria is an accomplished needlewoman, and a cushion worked by her was on sale at a recent basaar, the satin cover of which had delicate embroidery of violets and their leaves in natural colors.
