A Heroine—Teacher—Tommy Figs.
you may define the word "heroine".

Tommy—a heroine is a woman that's always crying, and marries the biggest fool in the play, just because he's got a little dood mustache.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Bobby—Our dog's name is Cleo, but since my brother has been to college, he calls it Kicker. Johnny—I suppose that's the way they pronounce it at college. They're all crazy on football.

To create an appetite, and give tone to the digestive apparatus, use Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

A German scientist says that 3000 years hence there will be one man to every 220 women. This is a less gloomy outlook than if there were to be 220 women after every man—a condition that already exists at the summer resorts.

CATARH RELIEVED IN 10 TO 60 MINUTES—One short puff of the breath through the Blower, supplied with each bottle of Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, diffuses this powder over the surface of the nasal passages. Painless and delightful to use, it relieves instantly, and permanently cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Colds, Headache, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis and Deafness. 60 cents. At E. L. Street's.

Bramble—Yes, I'm ugly, I know I'm ugly; but there is one great consolation. Friend—What is that? Bramble—If I ever become great and the American people should resolve to erect a statue to my memory, they won't be able to make me out any uglier than I am.

Miscellaneous.

'Fame! echoed Mr. Watterson. 'I never hear the word that I do not think of Daniel Webster's story of the time he met an old gentleman in a railway car, and learned that he was from New Hampshire, though he would draw him out a little about the old home state. A little more conversation showed that the stranger came from Mr. Webster's native town. Here was an opportunity not to be lost.

'Did you ever hear of the Webster family there?' asked the statesman.

'Oh, yes; I know them very well. The old man and I were great friends.

'Ah! then you can probably tell me what became of the boys?

'Well, Ezekiel became a big lawyer—the biggest lawyer, I guess, in all New Hampshire. The girls, too, turned out well.

'You don't say so; and wasn't there a boy named Daniel?

'The old man pondered a minute before he answered.

'Now I come to think, there was a boy named Dan, but he went down to Boston years ago, and no one said heard of him since.

The director of a Chicago bank tells about his wife's overwork her account at the bank last month. 'If you spoke to her about it one evening,' says he, 'and told her she ought to adjust it at once. I sent the bank my check for the amount I had overdrawn!'

BEFORE MATCHES CAME.

The Flint and Steel and Rush Lights and Tallow Dips of Our Ancestors.

To the present generation it may seem next door to the incredible that in the first years of the reign of William IV. there were no lucifer matches. In lieu thereof there were only long matches or splints of wood tipped at each end with melted sulphur, and, before the complicated system of dipping the sulphuretted match into concentrated sulphuric acid came into use, these matches were kindled by first striking a light with flint and steel and then causing the spark to ignite a small quantity of tinder—an inflammable substance, usually composed of partially burned linen.

This simple adjunct to the process of obtaining a light had been in use all over the world from time immemorial. The French tinder was called "amadou," a word the etymology of which has been fiercely contested, some philosophers deriving it from the old French adjective "amou," equivalent to amorous, and conveying the moral idea of the sweetly agreeable sensation of the hand coming in contact with a very soft substance, while others trace it to the Latin "admanum dulcis." The French tinder was often made of the spongy portions of mushrooms and other fungi, and prior to the introduction of lucifer matches the manufacture of amadou was one of considerable importance. The cryptozoic substance was beaten off by hand somewhat after the manner of felt and then impregnated with a solution of either nitre or simply pulverized gunpowder. The Germans still fabricate a delicate kind of amadou which is used in surgery for stanching hemorrhage. As for flint and steel, they have been commonly used out from our domestic economy as they have from dreams, and the tinder-box is so rarely seen that it might well be included in an exhibition of old social curios.

With tinder and tinder-boxes has also vanished the rushlight which, when William Cobbett was a boy, English cottagers used to make for themselves by gathering rushes and dipping them successively in melted tallow until sufficient thickness of adipose matter was obtained. In houses where refinement was supposed to prevail the rushlight was placed in a japanned tin shade perforated with circular orifices, and the incandescent invalid had the pleasure of contemplating a large number of round spots of light on the ceiling reflected from the rushlight screen. "Dips," another form of tallow candle, much given to which stove to emulate was one in their form, but hardly succeeded in doing so, almost as shingly and as unbecomingly as the old and costly spermaceti. Seventy years ago gas was little used, there were no railroads, no steamships, no electric matches; yet, as Mr. Walter Besant might put it, the world went very well then.—London Daily Telegraph.

THE FOURTH OF JULY TIGER.

By ELLA LYLE.

'If it wasn't Fourth of July I'd take a nap, Archie,' said Uncle Sam, yawning. 'Precious little sleep we got last night. Mebbe we better get out more of them pyrotechnicals—I don't put 'em all out, fear of accidents. Bring along the candle.'

Mr. Hill did not finish his sentence; for as he advanced toward Archie, an animal's head, quite unlike Mr. Thompson's cat, became plainly visible. It needed but one sharp glance at the striped skin and fiery eyes to convince Uncle Sam that this was a 'serp' enough tiger, as he afterward said; and the speedy clambering upon a pile of boxes that followed this conviction was creditable to Uncle Sam's years.

Uncle and nephew stared at each other. Mr. Hill's feelings after clearing the ground were of great relief; for Archie, at least, was not losing his senses.

'Don't be scared, Archie,' he whispered. 'I'll call Hannah to bring my gun, an—'

'Aunt Hannah's gone up to the Beeches, and the tiger would eat her up if she came in,' answered Archie, softly and reproachfully.

'Well, well, I never,' whispered Mr. Hill, and then he looked helplessly at the tiger.

The animal had come out from his hiding place and was now inspecting her quarters. That she did not enjoy her visitors was evident; and she had an unpleasant way of standing motionless and then making a series of savage springs at various objects.

The door leading into the store room had been ajar, but one of the
