"Sir John Constantine," one of the Nelson's Library series (T. Nelson & Son, publishern, 35 and 36 Palmerston Row, London, E. C.), by "Q." A. T. Quiller-Couch, is a handsome little novel of 480, pages, which will interest the youthful mind in search of adventure and romance. The plot is a somewhat improbable one, dealing with what might be considered an absurd expedition by an Englishman and his son to Corsica with a view to placing the lad upon the throne of the island. The volume is somewhat pedantic in style, is absorbing, even fascinating, in spots, the sentiment is elevating, and its perusal enjoyable.

CURED BY BEE STINGS.

How a Schoolmaster Got Rid of Rheumatism. London, May 17.-There is a prevalent belief in many countries that the stings of bees act both protectively and as a cure for rheumatism.

Dr. Newton Friend, a reputable Suf-folk physician, contributes to the cur-rent issue of Nature an account of a ee-sting cure which came under his per-onal observation.

Two or three years ago, he says, a schoolmaster who suffered severely from rheumatism in the back deliberately exposed his arms to the stings of bees. By the time his arms were well again his rheumatism had sompletely disappeared, and he has never had another attack.

The gentleman who took this heroic measure is now close to 50 years of

The time the machines remained in the air and the speed would be considered in making the award.

Some Business Methods.

Toronto Saturday Night: New York brokers at the present time are very keen after business, and they are offering inducements which would not have been thought of a few years ago. The reason is that the general commission ing inducements which would not have been thought of a few years ago. The reason is that the general commission business is slow. Even what are usually termed big houses are accepting orders for 50 down as 10-share lots, and on a margin of $2 per share and upwards. Of course, such an order on the small margin must be accompanied with a stop-ioss order at 2 per cent. less than the price paid for the stock. Such a transaction is nothing more than a gamble, and is on a par with the alleged bucket-shop speculation. Houses doing such a business as a rule have little means, and are not in a position to hold securities for their customers. The securities are hypothecated with banks or loan companies. A commission broker who holds no stocks is perhaps in a better position to give better advice to a client than another house who is endowed with ample means to pay for all the securities. client than another house who is endowed with ample means to pay for all the securities they buy for customers. The interest account is a more profitable one to a broker than the profits made through commissions. A house with a good number of "bear" clients usually piles up profits very fast. For instance, a broker may have on his books $500,000 of a certain security, and at the same time some customer may be "short" $500,000 of a similar issue. In this case $500,000 of a similar issue. In this cas $500,000 of a similar issue. In this case the broker would practically have no stock to carry. It would be offset by the 'bear' client, for whom it was sold. But, nevertheless, the client holding $500,000 of security in this case is charged, say, 5 per cent. for holding accurities which had been sold by the broker. In the course of a year chere would be a net profit of $25,000 to the commission house on this transaction.
