portion of the frozen deep which lies be-tween the northern coasts of Siberia and the Pole. It was in the latter part of August, 1872, that the Tegetthoff was last seen in a violent storm, off the Is-lands of Nova Zembla, and since then no word of her fate has reached Europe, either through the whalers whose track she might be expected to cross, or the Siberian tribes with whom her boat and sledge parties it was hoped would com-mitmicate during the winter of 1872-73. The region which she attempted to ex-plore has been memorable for three centuries by deeds of heroism and endur-ance. Capt. Weyprecht intended to double the icy cape at the north end of Nova Zembla, and seeking the open wa-ter supposed to lice on the east side of the islands, push eastward till he reached the Pacific. That is precisely the course which the sturdy Dutch navigator Wil-jiam Barentz laid down for himself two hundred and eighty years ago; and the story of his sufferings, his courage, and his death forms one of the most interest-ing chapters in the history of the earlier Arctio voyages. Barentz, seeking a route to Cathay by way of the Sea of Kara. was wrecked on Nova Zembla,

In a chart of in the history of the earlier Arctic voyages. Barentz, seeking a ronte to Cathay by way of the Sea of Kara, was wrecked on Nova Zembla, and passed a frightful winter in a hut built of the timber of his ship. The next summer he and his men took to their hoats a in desperate effort to reach the European continent, and after a long voyage twelve of the crew arrived at a Russian settlement, but Barentz died on the way. Only three years ago a Norwegian whaler found the hut, built in 1595, on the scene of the wreck, and brought away numerous relies of that ancient expedition.

A MISCREANT entered a saloon in 'To-ronto on Saturday and after robbing the till set fire to the building and then spik-ed the key-holes of the alarm boxes in the neighborhood so that warning could not be given to the Fire Department, The flames were fortunately extinguished, however, by the aid[of water pails.
