Headache.

Pain across the forehead or at back of head is dangerous. It slowly but surely weakens the intellectual powers, impairs the vitality and will. Headache is sometimes from the eyes but more frequently is caused by a disordered condition of the stomach and digestive organs. Do not suffer. The pain can be cured by the harmless remedy

It never loses its effect. Cures by driving out the poison, and does not simply deaden the pain as do so many preparations containing narcotics. Abbey's in the morning will make you well and keep you well.

There were gifts of every description, however, which told that all this simplicity was from choice and not from lack of ornaments. Almost everything in the way of silver and jewels had been showered upon the gentle girl, whom all had grown to love, and there were two or three tables loaded with testimonials of friendship and good-will.

Miss Waldemar, the other bride, was Miss Waldemar, the other bride, was elegant in a delicate mauve-colored satin, trimmed with point lace; a set of diamonds fit for a queen, and which emitted flashes of light with her every motion. In her hand she carried a small bouquet of feathery clematis, and, with that subdued glory of happiness on her face, really made her as lovely if not a lovelier bride than sweet Annie Noble, as Grace Campbell had predicted.

Grace herself also demands a word of notice, for she had never looked so hand-

It had been but a delusion, and her untutored heart had rebelled like a child's, simply because it could not have what it had craved. Still, her suffering, for the time, had been deep and real, and had thus served to purify and ennoble her nature.

"I see now that it would not have been "she thought, as she looked upon young couple while they plighted r yows. The words were spoken which made Annie Noble and Richmond Waldemar Halstead husband and wife; and then his father led Audrey quietly forward to their side, where a few simply spoken sentences united the hearts which for long years had been so true to each

New York caterer himself.

Just before the newly-wedded couples were to start upon their trip, "Uncle George" drew Annie and her husband aside and put a folded paper into the young bride's hands.

"This fine-looking, high-headed chap of yours," he began, with a sly wink at Rich, "would make me do it! so I guess I've fixed it all square, and the whole thing is yours to do what you've a mind with."

Well, but what is it, Uncle George?" Annie asked, as she unfolded the legalooking document, and was appalled at its length and technicalities.
"It's nothing but a deed of that house in New York, and I only hope you'll enjoy living in it as much as I've helped fixing it up for you," returned Mr. Starkey, regarding the fair little wife with a fond expression.

Annie was deeply moved upon reading this, and sat quietly wiping the tears from her cheeks, unable to speak for some moments. some moments.

"It's well to be prepared for emergencies, though I intend to hold on to life as long as the good Lord'll let me stay," remarked Miss Starkey, as Annie refolded the paper; "and so I thought I'd 'tend to this matter while I felt pretty well. Of course, if it doesn't suit you, child, it can be changed; and I know, too, that Grace'll have enough of her own by and bye; but I thought 'twould short of show my appreciation of her kindness to me last year if I gave her a little something to use especially on her errands of mercy."

He and Miss Starkey had come to spend

As soon as they went back Mr. Star-key had consulted with Mr. Mason, and before Rich returned a fine stable was in process of completion; Mr. Remington in process of completion; Mr. Remington himself having planned the structure in order that it might correspond with the house. And now there were a couple of fine horses housed within it, and in the carriage-house adjoining a handsome coupe, the gift of Mr. Halstead, senior. That gentleman and his wife were occupying handsome apartments on Fifth avenue, not far from the Campbells, preferring to board for the winter, as they were contemplating a trip abroad the following summer. Meantime Mrs. Campbell was herself absorbed in the excitement of wedding preparations, for Roger Hamilton had persuaded Grace that she alone could make him happy for life; and she, feeling

"I a like to have you read that as carefully as you've a mind to, and then tell me what you think of it," she said, briefly; and then drawing out her knitting, she sat down to wait until she had compiled with her request.

"No, indeed, Mr. Starkey, although at the time I feared you were proposing a more extravagant style than I could afford to support," Rich replied, heartily; and it may be stated here that he, too, had received documents that morning from his father, investing him with his mother's fortune, to the amount of seventy-five thousand dollars. After this came the farewells, and Rich and his bride departed on their tour, accompanied by Arthur Halstead and his wife as far as Bangor, where they separated. TOMORROW'S GAMES.

Tomorrow's gridiron contests will decide which teams will clash in the finals of the intermediate O. R. F. U. Series. Wise ones are picking London II to defeat Toronto II, and Peterboro II to wallop Ottawa II. As to the latter game there can be little doubt of the result. In the London-Toronto game, however, anything is liable to happen. The Torontos have strengthened at all points and will doubtless put up a game struggle. Despite all this, however, followers of St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 30.—The going and S doubtless put up a game struggle. Despite all this, however, followers of the game in London are confident that the Cockneys will win the game that will entitle them to wade into the Peterboro bunch. The Toronto papers are confident that Gibbons will not be allowed to play with London tomor-row. Even should this be true, the team will be quite as strong as in any previous game.

BODIES AS FERTILIZERS

A Brahmin's Odd Reason for Objecting to Cremation.

Owing to the crowded condition of the swarming population in many parts of India, and the wretched circumstances amid which so many millions of them live, it has been found difficult for the British officials to check the progress of plagues and pestilences by the exercise of the most stringent sanitary regulations, says the San Francisco Cail. In spite of all that has been done to improve the health of the country, disease germs lurk and propagate almost everywhere. Much of the evil is attributed to the methods employed by the various Guelph was somewhat hurried, but the races and sects in dealing with the bodies visitors seemed such impressed at the of their dead, and some time ago the Government undertook to induce the people to practice cremation. It is the belief of the Government that if all the diseased bodies were duly burned the disease germs would be gradually destroyed and danger of pestilence largely diminished.

When the proposal was submitted to the Indian Council it was well understood that it would meet with violent opposition, and that it would be impossible to enforce the arbitrary act. A campaign of education on the subject was, therefore, begun, with the hope that it would eventually result in obtaining the assent of the leaders of the natives to the re-form. It was deemed a foregone conclusion that the opposition would be base upon religious grounds, and according the campaign of education was carefull outlined to avoid that issue, and bring the whole proposition within the domain of science.
To the astonishment of the British

To the astonishment of the British, some of the leading Brahmins have declared against cremation, on the grounds of the very science to which the Government appealed. The Westminster Gazette quotes a Brahmin member of the staff of the Indian Government Education Institution as saying: "There is no substance in the world which is so rich in plant food as the carcase of an animal. When it is burned and converted into ashes all the work accomplished by nature in her laboratory is wasted. The nitrogen is dispersed in the air. At eightpence a pound, the nitrogen in flesh and bones in each human carcase is worth about two each human carease is worth about two rupees. It is worth while storing it away at the roots of plants instead of allowing it to disperse in the air. * * * Cremation can do little harm so long as it is practiced by few, but universally adopted it will only man a few million adopted it will only mean a few million tons of food less per annum, and a gradually diminishing supply of food for the existing races of animals. * * * I would rather imagine my body slowly passing into the substance of mangoes and 'gold mohurs' planted in cemeteries than that it should be resolved into its native elements by sudden process in the course of an hour."

While that argument is more remarkable for its incompiler than its velidity. able for its ingenuity than its validity, it is an interesting illustration of the extent to which Great Britain has manag-

For coughs, colds and all affections of the throat, lungs and chest it is a specific which has never been known to fall. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, thereby removing the phlegm, and gives the diseased parts a chance to heal.

the diseased parts a chance to heal. Two churches in Neodesha, Mo., have offered their bells for sals. The rest of the churches have none. The church trustees and the pastors agree that the bells are an unnecessary annoyance. THERE IS ONLY ONE ECLECTRIC OIL.—When an article, be it medicine of anything else, becomes popular, imitations invariably spring up to derive advantages from the original, which they themselves could never win on their own merits. Imitations of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil have been numerous, but never successful. Those who know the genuine are not put off with a substitute, but demand the real thing.

That natural sleep is due to the drugging effect of accumulated car-bonic acid in the body is the view taken by a French physiologist, Dr. Raph-
