SOME ODD SCENES IN AYUTHIA moderate.

Ancient Capital Is the Center of the Elephant Drives Arranged for Royal Sport.

Ayuthia, Siam, April 8. - Here at Ayuthia, the ancient capital of Siam. re located the schools for the instruction of the youths who are to enter the priesthood. Close by the river bank with a huge, wide spreading bo tree shading the porch and steps, the long oblong schoolhouse of the wat or temple precinct resounded with the chant of oriental schoolboys reciting their lessons. In the one room on high stilts there was a blackboard and a row of desks and benches along the river side wall-a wall that consisted of woden bars six inches apart and that gave full view to the busy river below and its opposite green shore, bordered with floating houses and shops. Dogs ran in and out, one small boy smoked a cigarette, and none of them was overburdened with clothes.

Given such a breezy schoolroom, such an outlook, and the consolations of Dog Tray and an occasional smoke, almost any American boy of the same he partnership heretofore existing under age would consider a Siamese school a paradise. There were several little priests in one shoulder left bare and one shoulder draped with the yellow robe of the and ignominy upon as a Chinaman's order, their heads shaved as smooth as their faces. None of them was more than 12 years of age, and when King's property, and when brought in the school was asked to sing the Siamese national anthem the smallest of the brownie priests worked his toes and has to be cared for, tended, and TO RENT-FIRST-CLASS STORAGE OF in embarrassment for a moment, then spared like a blooded horse. One delightfully lean old priest in spectacles sat statuesque in the middle of a large canoe, sheltering his shining pate by a big foreign umbrella, while women in green and purple panungs, white jackets and washbowl hats paddled vigorously at bow and stern. Four times we passed and met this picturesque boat group, until felt sure they knew exactly their full value in the landscape, how admirably they filled the foreground of views up and down the water village's main street. We climbed another skeleton staircase of teak high in air and then were shown where the wild elephants, beaten in from the jungle for weeks beforehand and slowly pushed on towards Ayuthia, swim the river and are brought up the bank to be insidiously led into the great kraal during the night by the King's tame elephants. Once in every two or three years these lephant hunts are arranged for the court's diversion, and 200 and 300 elephants swim the river and slowly wander into a great square pen of teak logs driven deep in the ground, braced and woven together.
