He was first asked to explain why he told the crown attorney that his life insurance policy was payable to his wife, when, as a matter of fact. it was made out to the Traders' Bank. Dr. Riddell said that it was a misunderstanding. The policy had been in the bank ever since he took out the insurance. He thought it was made out to his wife, because he believed

She heard the doctor come home on the Dr. Roy Riddell gave his evidence night of Mrs. Riddell's death, in a very collected way, referring to could not say how long afterwards if was that the doctor came to her door to get her assistance. later.

In the meantime he had found the body of his wife. The Coroner's Charge. Dr. Ellis, reviewing the evidence commented at length on Dr. Riddell's conduct. He thought it most extraordinary that the man had concluded at once that his wife was dead "Would any ordinary man run at once without inquiring if she was in faint?" asked the coroner. He insinuated that Dr. Riddell acted in a very strange manner when he ran through the village telling about his wife's death without having made inquiries. He said the evidence showed that prussic acid had caused the woman's death and argued that it was therefore either suicide or homicide. Ellis also told how long it would take to effect death by poisoning. A frail little woman like Mrs. Riddell could be knocked down and when rendered unconscious would be an easy victim for a murderer, who could pour the poisor down her throat. The whole would not occupy more than thirty
