CHAPTER 29.

I guess, after all, Johnny Kling, of I guess, after all, Johnny Kling, of the old Cubs, was the best all-around catcher I ever saw. I have put him at the top of the catching staff of my grand All-American team, and the more I think about it the more I am convinced of being right. I have put Roger Bresnahan and Ray Schalk to work with Kling.

That, to my way of thinking, would be the best catching outfit baseball ever has seen or maybe, ever will ever has seen or maybe, ever will see. If any baseball man doesn't agree with me I'm open to argument. I'll present mine first.

Johnny Kling was always aggressive, and had the best throwing arm from any position of any catcher I ever saw. He was a wonder at finding out batters' weaknesses, and was allowed to sign the pitchers as he judged best.

Kling had another faculty I have never seen in another catcher. While warming up the pitcher before the game he could tell which was the game he could tell which was the pitcher's best ball to pitch for that day. Did you ever know anybody else who could do that? One day a pitcher's fast ball might be best; another day it might be his curve ball or his slow ball. Kling would find out quickly, and the pitcher would feature that restigning hall for that feature that particular ball for that day, especially in the pinches. That is one of the secrets of many a pitcher's success, and also of the old Cubs' success. A batter never knew exactly how to figure the pitcher Kling used to warm up two or three pitchers, and the managers would let him make the selection for the liberately injured anybody. Believe me, though, he always took all that eautiful fielder of foul flies and bunted balls. He was a wonder on tag-ging base runners and backing up plays at first. King had a soft of knack of guessing on what ball a runner would attempt to steal and generally did the thinking for the

Kling was a past master at breaking up the double steal. The fact that there was a man on third as well as first never worried him. He would whip that ball down to second just the same. Often he would freeze the man on third and them. the man on third and then get the other runner by ten feet. That took

London, Jan. 7.—Games played in the rugby union here today resulted as follows:
Harpenden 27: Sutton 2.

Bay Schelk my third catcher is a fact that to de the data to the total twice about the weakness of any batter. He had a great memory. He was unusually aggressive and fearless as a regular or extra man. His hitting alone gives him a place. And, let me tell you, Ruth is a much better fielder and a faster man on base than a lot of people think, He looks slow on account of his immense step that a called third strike on him was ever over the plate. His heart was so step that a called third strike on him was ever over the plate. His heart was so step that a called third strike on him was ever over the plate. Ray Schalk, my third catcher, is a Ray Schalk, my third catcher, is a dandy. I think him the most natural catcher of them all. He actually makes the work look easy. Schalk can catch any kind of pitching, and the pitchers always want to work with him. He has a great baseball head and knows exactly how to direct a pitcher. For a man his size Schalk has great endurance. He can catch every day during a season. Fans forget that a catcher has to make as many throws as the pitcher. That is very tiring on the arm. Still, the pitcher gets at least three days' rest out of four while the catcher sticks in there day in and day out until he ere day in and day out until he

He Covers the Most Ground. Schalk is good at breaking up the double steal and squeeze play. He is always in the game, and probably covers more ground during a ball game than any catcher in the busi-
