FARLEY'S CASE

DROPPING $100,000 IN A LICTLE OVER I WO YEARS

A Bank Manager and His Broker-Who is Two years and May Mr. Farley forsook the quiet sthe of handling bankvious, and more devices, and m closes up without owing anyone he will have done well. For the first six months he was uncommonly successful: he cleared over $20,000. Then the tide turned and he has lost that being reflected the greatest possible credit upon the man in charge, who felt proud in saying he had the finest pack of fox hounds in the dominion. market. His own losses and those of his clients in the late Chicago tumble are said to foot up to over $190,000. Farley apparently was fool enough to trust the repre-sentations of others: a man who believes another in a stock deal of any kind is a fool. another in a stock deal of any kind is a fool. It is a "skin game" from beginning to close, each trying to gouge the other. No one tries to make anything; the world is no richer for their transaction; it is simply that so much money is put in the pot, and the players then seek by combination, by craft, and by cheating to grab it. Of course somebody makes, but he in his turn loses that. The whole is gradually frittered away. It goes for office rent of brokers, telegraphing, champagne, etc. But it all

When Mr. Farley comes to straighten When Mr. Farley comes to straighten out his affairs, his position may prove much better than common report states it to be, but whatever is the outcome there is a general feeling of sympathy with Mr. Farley in the present aspect of affairs and a corresponding general opinion that he has been very harshly treated by those who he has seen through not a little trouble, and who had promised to stand by him when his turn came. But they went and swore out a capias, or started to swear out a capias. a capias, or started to swear out a capias, against him when he had only gone to dig-

Perhaps the manager knows who it was.
At all events the broker thinks he knows. There is a suspicious name all through Far-ley's books, viz., H. S. Jackson. Who is H. S. Jackson? Is he a bank manager? H. S. Jackson? Is he a bank manager? Did he speculate in stocks? Did he speculate in the stock of his own bank? Perhaps Mr. H. S. Strathy knows who Mr. H. S. Jackson is! Mr. Nordheimer was good enough to tell a reporter on Saturday that The World's article was written in revenge, and was not in accordance with the facts. But his interviews published in two eventure show every externant of The ing papers show every statement of The World verified. Perhaps these papers were also animated by revenge. At all events Mr. Nordheimer had better be a little more careful in his remarks. For as one man put it on Saturday, after reading Mr. Nordheimer's statement, "The World can mop the floor with him if it wishes." Writs were issued and served on Mr.
Nordheimer on Saturday, for $100,000

While all this is going on here, Mr. Strathy has arrived safely in England.

The Fireman Killed and the Engine Badly Scalded—The Locomotive and Tender a Complete Wreck.

The storm which struck the city on Satarday before noon and which did not abate until late in the afternoon was especially severely felt in towns to the west, The mallest streams were swollen to rushing torrents, causing great damage to property Between Beachville and Woodstock a small stream, or rather ditch, runs parallel to the Credit Valley railroad for several yards and then crosses under the track. The engineer of No. 12 express, which left the city at 1 p. m. Saturday, knowing of this cut and fearing that at the place where the culvert is built the road might be in a dangerous state, slackened the speed of the iron horse. The little stream, however, had done work in a part where the driver did not expect it, having undermined from near the point where begins to run alongside. The iron horse came on slowly and had not gone but a few yards over the undermined road when it toppled on its side, pulling the tender and baggage car on top of it. The firemen, Wm. Cochran, was filling the furnace at the time, against which it is supposed that he was thrown. By the force of the fall the top was knocked off the steam chest, through which the pent-up steam made a rapid exist, and by reason of its heat prevented the passengers or train officials from coming to the rescue of the half buried engineer and basengers or train officials from coming to the rescue of the half buried engineer and firemen. The former, J. Devaney, was seated en his post of outlook at the time of the accident, and was thus not brought in close contact with the furnace. He was the first to come forth from the pyramid of iron and seething steam and was soon taken care of by his friends. Mr. Cochran the fireman was somewhat longer, being delayed by reason of having to pass the steam chest ere he could reach the outer air. When he did arrive he appeared like one who had been dipped in a boiling cauldron. His face and hands were literally cooked, and on raising the latter to his head, which seemed to cause him the greatest agony, they left behind them hideous marks. The sight was heartrending and one long to be remembered by the spectators with horror. The unfortunate men were removed to a hotel at Beachville, where after three hours' intense agony Cochran expired. Devaney, at last reports, was said to be out of danger. This is more than the catholics do, otherwise they would not honor the health of his holiness before that of her majesty at their festive gatherings. Against their religion I have nothing to say, but when the catholics become meddlesome and prejudiced it is time to interfere. The doctor proceeded to say that this is what they are becoming. With their assumption and faith, these people are dangerous. They exercise an undue infinence in the government of the country; the church is too near the parliament buildings. Archbishop Lynch was mentioned by name as meddling in politics and exercising too much authority in political matters, finding more favor in government circles than the representative of the established church of England. The doctor told the brettien that their course is clear. They were justifed in banding together to gain their rights, and he hoped that they would add to their present wealth and strength, never forgetting to observe the teachings of the gospel. the country and the queen.
