

One day Julie came home all excited with a story that to this day we can scarcely believe; and Guy and Rose laugh, and say Julie made a mistake; but Julie declared that, as she was coming home from school—she did not go to the school we went to in town; it was a tiny school just in the village where a lady taught a few little girls—our school was too far for her to walk—Julie said that, as she was coming home, with her satchel in her hand, Miss Templeton came out of a cottage close by, dressed in a black velvet gown; and when she saw Julie, she said, "What is your name, little girl?" and put her hand on her head; and when Julie said, "Julie Bridges," she sighed, and gave her a kiss.

"You were dreaming, you know," said Guy; "you were walking in your sleep." He said that to tease her, for she sometimes walked in her sleep.

"Could I be asleep when I was coming home from school?" Julie asked.

"You dreamed it last night," said Guy.

"I didn't," said Julie, in her plaintive voice. "She kissed me here," touching a place on her cheek.

"I dare say a lady stopped you, and asked you name," said Rose—"very likely, and gave you a kiss; but that lady was not Miss Templeton, of that you may be sure."

"But I do know Miss Templeton, and it was her," Julie said; "and she had a velvet gown, and she held it up in her hand; and just down the road was her carriage and gray horses—so there!"

"Miss Templeton isn't the only person in the world who has gray horses to her carriage," said Lance. "Why, Julie, you've only seen Miss Templeton a few times yourself; you could make a mistake quite easily."

"But I didn't—and it was," persisted Julie. "And she looked so nice when she smiled."

"That clenches the matter," laughed Guy. "Your lady was never Miss Templeton, Miss Templeton could never look anything but very sour and grim."

The next day we were all out walking together, and Miss Templeton's carriage passed by.

"Now Julie, see if she'll know you," we all cried in a breath; and Guy added, "She'll surely blow you a kiss!"

Julie looked straight into her eyes, and gave a soft little smile, but Miss Templeton's sour face never changed; she passed over Julie and all of us as if she had never seen us before in her life.

"Didn't we tell you so?" we all cried out together. "See Julie, you did make a mistake."

But Julie would not be convinced, then she grew very red indeed.

"But it was Miss Templeton that kissed me," she would persist in saying; and—we never could get her to change her mind.

We told auntie about it, and how silly and obstinate Julie was. She looked a little surprised, and asked for the story to be told to her again, as she had not listened properly at first; and when we explained exactly how it happened she said neither one thing nor another, but only looked at Julie musingly for a long while, with her head a little on one side.

Of course auntie had often been to Beechwood before any of us were born; she said the rooms were very big, and all were beautifully furnished. We had never seen the house at all, except a little in the distance, through the branches of the trees that grew around it; we had passed the place two or three times when we had little picnics by ourselves, and we had often wondered what she did there by herself in all those great big rooms, though of course, she had a good many servants to wait on her, I suppose.

CHILDREN who are puny, pale, weak, or scrofulous, ought to take Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That builds up both their flesh and their strength. For this, and for purifying the blood, there's nothing in all medicine that can equal the "Discovery."

In recovering from "Grippe," or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, or other wasting diseases, it speedily and surely invigorates and builds up the whole system. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, rouses every organ into natural action, and brings back health and strength.

For all diseases caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin, and Scalp Diseases—even Consumption (or Lung-scorfula) in its earlier stages—the "Discovery" is the only guaranteed remedy.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

AMMONIA.

In the mechanical world AMMONIA is of great use. Its alkaline effects make it very valuable for the coarser sort of scouring and cleansing. Some manufacturers of Baking Powder resort to it the most frequently and recklessly. They by its use make a great saving in Cream of Tartar, and the consumer suffers in its proving highly injurious to the coating of the stomach.
