As I stated at the outset of my remarks, the task is tremely complex since, as I have tried to point out, the problem made up of a series of interrelated factors, some weighing re heavily on some parts of the globe, others affecting a fferent group of countries. The consideration here of all these oblems - satisfance, surpluses and dumping, trade and trade rriers - at one time, serve to underline their complexity and, as . Phillppe de Seynes reminded us, their interrelation. It also rves to keep in proper balance the suggested ways of dealing th individual aspects of the problem. We would hope that connued use is made of this forum for general discussion, so that the re specialized United Nations bodies will receive guidance in eir particular work, and be enabled to carry out their functions re effectively. ...
