

opened in the interior parts of the country, and from these resources, it has obtained considerable note for its stone-lime and hardware exports. Cotton is brought from the south, is manufactured in its mills, and returned with advantage in the form of shawls, stripes, muslins, or handkerchiefs.

There is no marked difference between the people of Rhode-Island, and those of other New-England states. But there is a distinguishable difference between them, together with the other New-Englanders, and the inhabitants of the south. Amongst ourselves we call the former Yankies; but foreigners have dubbed us all with that title. The latter according to their respective states are denominated, Virginians, Kentuckians, or Georgians. The New-Englanders, considered as one body represented in an individual, are a sanctimonious, sober, good-looking, and withal an enterprizing neighbour, full of excellent thoughts and new inventions. The southern people, considered in the same manner, are a hospitable, complaisant, as well as a profane, slave driving and swarthy looking personage, who, however, keeps a sharp eye to his own aggrandizement and that of his country. The middle States, among which New-York stands pre-eminent, hold that just medium, which cannot fail to produce respect and veneration.

A rapid journey through Vermont, New-Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode-Island, exclusive of Maine and Connecticut, could not