ed in my text. Now, faith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your beart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning; and rend your hearts, and not your garments. To turn to the Lord with all the heart implies a feparation from all idols, a renunciation of every fin, and fincerity in opposition to all hypocritical fervice. Many in the time of trouble will difcover fome marks of humility and concern; they may be anxious that God would remove their afflictions : but their hearts may be unaffected; they may ftill cleave to their idols. And while their hearts are unbroken for fin, the great purpose for which afflictions are sent is not answered. Though such people may fast and pray, they are neither penitent nor humble. Hence God addreffes them in this manner: When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations ; incense is an abomination unto me; when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you ; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not bear. Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; ceafe to do evil, learn to do well. Now inftead of offering to God mere lip fervice, we must return to him with all our hearts. We must be filled with felf abasement and felf abhorrence, with godly forrow and unfeigned contrition; our hearts must be broken off from fin. With unfeigned fubmiffion to the righteousness of God, we must earnestly supplicate the pardon of our fins and the fins of this nation. This fhould be accompanied with fafting, and other tokens of humiliation. To abstain from food, fo far as health and circumftances will allow, is a fuitable acknowledgement that we have forfeited our most common mercies; it is fome proof alfo that we are fo deeply engaged in our religious fervices, that we cannot fuffer the leaft interruption, not fo much as to eat and to drink. In this way we ought to fubmit to the chaftifement of a righteous Providence, and to crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts.
