It is already runored that the supply of the east end, which is derived from the River Lea, is about to be cut off during the greater part of the day and night, with what consequences to the teeming population of the east end may be easily imagined. The major portion of London's water supply, however, comes from the Thames, which, according to latest report, is practically drying up.

If August and September are as dry as last year the water companies may have to take the whole flow of the Thames in September or put customers on shortest rations. With the Lea exhausted and the Thames depleted, the question of the hour is: Where is London to turn for a water supply; it will take years to bring the water from the Weish hills, as has been suggested, yet the Government is taking no steps seriously to grapple with a question, which clearly must soon be solved if the health of the city is to be regarded.

The Toronto Orthopedic Hospital, Bloorstreet, was recently honored by a visit from Mr. H. J. Tresidder, secretary of the National Orthopedic Hospital, London, Eng., of which the Duke of Mariborough Eng., of which the Duke of Marlborough is president. Among other things, Mr. Tresidder was especially interested in the mechanical department of the hospital, where the various appliances and boots used in the treatment of the lame, crippled and deformed are manufactured. Thus far the English institution has not had these appliances made in the höspital by its own specially trained mechanics, but has been dependent on instrument-makers outside. Mr. Tresidder's program contemplated a visit to some of the orthopedic hospitals in the United States, after which he will return home.
