TRUSTEE J. B. WRIGH REVIEWS THE HIGH

Gives Reasons for Advocating Three-School Plan.

The following letter for publication has been submitted by Trustee J. B. Wright of the board of education: To the Editor of The Advertiser: The issue before the electors in reference to the Collegiate Institute is of such vital importance that I feel that I should be negligent in my duty as a representative of the people on the board of education did I not do something to prevent a decision being forced on the board that would reap nothing but condemnation in the years to

on the board that would reap nothins but condemnation in the years to come.

When the fire made the building of a new school imperative, it was voted to erect a 36-roomed school on the present site, and plans for such a structure were immediately drawn. A strong protest from the department of education caused a change in plans, and a 26-roomed school on the present site, with a 10-roomed school in South or East London was then contemplated. Even this was considered unsatisfactory by the department, and the three-school plan was finally adopted.

The department of education, most high school teachers, the past principals of our own collegiate, in short, every important educational authority, favors several small schools rather than one large central collegiate, and they have given us a great deal of information in support of their opinion.

They tell us that the best work can be done in a school of 16 rooms or less, and that teachers that have been unusually successful in smaller places cannot get as good results in a large school. Even our old collegiate was so large that only pupils of more than average ability could be successful. Four or five classes of pupils drop out between the first and second years in the collegiate, and a corresponding number between the second and third years. The great majority of these would receive more individual attention in smaller schools and would remain a longer time at school.

It is estimated that 500 of the London collegiate pupils are forced to pay on an average of $10.000 a year, in street car fare, and then must walk three blocks after getting off the car, and this falls most heavily on the workingman who is endeavoring to educate his children. Next year the number will be largely increased by the coming into force of the new adolescent act, which

The first toast was that to "The King and the Craft" to which the entire assemblage responded, after which Ex. Companion J. Acheson toasted "The Grand Chapter of Canada." Right Ex. Companion J. S. Barnard, in a very instructive address, replied to this number. "The Officers of London Chapters." proposed by Comp. William Blay, was responded to by Ex. Companions A. J. Wilkins, J. B. Smith and Thomas Coleridge, first principals of St. John's, St. George's and London Chapters, respectively. R. Ex. Companion A. E. Cooper proposed the toast to "The Installing Officers," and it was responded to by Right Excellent Companions John Graham and John Nunn. Other speakers at the banquet included Ex. Companions C. C. Reid, T. P. Elliott, and Right Ex. Companions O. Ellwood and Thomas Rowe. In addition to the toast list an excellent musical program was rendered.

Officers installed in the three chapters Wednesday night are as follows:

avail themselves of all the facts, they will see is not in the best interests of London.

London is increasing rapidly in population. Those who realize this and who believe that high schools should be placed where they will meet the needs of the people, as has been done in the case of public schools, will support the three-school scheme. Sincerely. hree-school scheme.
