The Garland.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill: a kindly word Can never leave a sting behind; And, oh! to breathe each tale we've heard, Is far beneath a noble mind.

Give me the heart that fain would hide— Would fain another's faults efface, How can it pleasure human pride To prove himself more than a man?

Then speak no ill—but lenient be To other's failings as your own; If you're the first to fault to see, You're the first to make it known; For life is but a passing day; No lip may tell how brief his span; Then, oh! the little time we stay, Let's speak of all the best we can.

A LITTLE WOMAN.

In a little room she sat, her eyes were bright, In a little lamp of sugar and wax she sat; In a little woman there grew and multiplied, As from a little seed the flower doth arise.

A paper in a very small, but seasons every dinner, More than all other condiments, although 'tis sprinkled sparingly.

And as within the little rose you'll find the richest dye, And as a little grain of gold much price and value lies, So in a little woman there is a taste of paradise.

The sky-lark and the nightingale, though small and light of wing, Yet warble sweeter in the grove than all the birds that sing.

Miscellaneous.

THE THIRD EGG.

"You don't eat this morning, my love," said Mr. Dalbeck to Mr. Dalbeck, as they sat at breakfast in their little back parlour at Chelsea; "try another egg—do!" "The beautifully fresh, and 'twill do you good."

"I had a curious dream last night, my dear," said Mrs. Dalbeck, as she sat at the table, "I dreamt that I had got my spoon into the yolk."

"Dreams," said Dalbeck, innocently, "always come out contrary."

"How very remarkable, then," observed Mrs. Dalbeck, "that I should have dreamed you bought me that charming sweet-alum that I saw at Swan & Edgar's?"

"That was for the dear children's sake," observed Mr. Dalbeck, looking down his nose into his egg; he felt that he stood on the brink of a precipice—and was silent.

"The Honourable Mrs. Cawthorne has just such another."

"It's so becoming, too; just the colour that you like, and so genteel; you know, my love, I have a great objection to a silver."

"I don't mind for myself; anything would do for me; but I confess I like to look respectable as your wife."

Dalbeck gave a deep sigh, which nearly amounted to a groan, but continued to eat his egg in obstinate silence.

"It's so enormously cheap," observed Mrs. Dalbeck, coming again to the charge; "only five guineas, my love."

"Five guineas!" echoed Dalbeck, discoloured by this last remark from his taciturn position; "where is it to come from?"

"Why, I suppose from your pocket, my dear?" "You must put it out of your head; I can't afford it; never so hard pressed for money in my life."

"Dalbeck! I didn't think you would be so unkind—I may say ungrateful—after I gave up my regular monthly Margate last summer, because you wished it."

"Ay, replied the husband; "but you went to Boulogne instead, and stopped two months."

"That was for the dear children's sake," observed Mr. Dalbeck, looking down his nose into his egg; he felt that he stood on the brink of a precipice—and was silent.

Occupation for Children.

The habits of children prove that occupation is of necessity most of them. They love to be busy, even about nothing, still more to be usefully employed. With some children it is a strongly developed physical necessity, and if not turned to good account will be productive of positive evil, thus verifying the old adage that "Idleness is the mother of mischief." Children should be encouraged, not induced, to do their own work, and should be taught to do it with pleasure.

WOMAN.—The true and noble woman disdains to rule, either as wife or mistress; she seeks a lord and not a slave. Her love must ever look upwards; and except in the moral relation, there can be no love between man and woman that does not tend to the elevation of the latter.

PAINTING.—"There is a pleasure in painting," says Hazlitt, "which none but painters know." In writing, you have to contend with the world; in painting, you have only to carry on a friendly strife with Nature.

THE HUMANIZING INFLUENCE OF CLEANLINESS.—A neat, clean, fresh, sweet, cheerful, well-arranged, and well-situated house, exercises a moral as well as a physical influence over its inmates, and makes the members of a family peaceable and contented.

INTELLECTUAL PROCRUSTY.—It once happened that a certain philosopher, who was much of an anxious natter about Mrs. Dalbeck, at what age she should begin to teach her child to read?

LOVE AND POVERTY.—Generally speaking, it will be found, notwithstanding the proverb, that with persons of a noble nature, the straitened resources which they slave together, and manage, and mitigate by mutual forbearance, are more conducive to the attainment of a high, moral and romantic passion than a luxurious and splendid property.

BEST PRODUCTS OF A NATION.—The great desideratum of a country is, that it produces superior men; its natural advantages are not to be despised, but they are of secondary importance.

THE NEEDLE.—How often have I blessed my needle for rescuing me from the temptations which assailed the other sex! Bright and innocent little implement, whether pined over tasteful luxuries, or gaining the poor purchase of a day, thou art the friend of her whose visions tend to wander amid the regions of higher abstractions, and of her whose thoughts are pinned down to the trivial of her minute progress!

There are at present no less than thirty widows keepers of inns in the city of Carlisle.
