

HALF MILLION DRIVE FOR U.N.B. IS COMMENCED

Two Donations Already Made Will Amount To At Least $100,000

SIR GEO. FOSTER AND
ROYAL BANK DONORS

Canvassing Commences Here
And In Fredericton
Next Week

FREDERICTON, March 22.—The fairest day of 1926, the first day of spring, ushered in the University of New Brunswick half million dollar endowment fund campaign in the city of Fredericton. With two donations that in themselves will amount to $100,000 from Sir George Foster and C. E. Neill and the Royal Bank, the campaign is getting away to an excellent start. Prospects are bright for many large endowment donations here and in Saint John next week. U. N. B. stock is soaring with her outstanding victories in football, hockey, basketball, track and debating of the past year and a half and the canvassers are very hopeful.

The campaign is being carried on by a committee of citizens interested in the university, acting under the direction of the endowment fund committee. Acting on the advice of Sir George E. Foster, the associated alumni, the senate and the alumnus worked out the details of an endowment fund for the university at the reunion of 1925. A committee was appointed from the senate, the alumni and the alumnus. Of this committee Dr. C. C. Jones, chancellor of the university, is chairman, and C. McN. Steeves is secretary.

EXPECT TO RAISE $500,000
Chancellor Jones, one of the trustees of the endowment fund, said today that it was hoped to make up this total of $500,000 from contributions, grants of the Provincial Government and from the city of Fredericton, insurance on students and alumni and interest. These funds are to be placed in keeping of the trustees, Dr. W. S. Carter, Sir Douglas Hazen, Dr. C. C. Jones, Dr. F. R. Taylor and Dr. C. E. Neill, and are to remain permanent. They will be used to build up the university until they amount to the desired total.

IN SAINT JOHN NEXT WEEK
The drive in Fredericton is expected to take all this week. Next week Saint John is to be canvassed and following that other parts of the province. On Thursday the canvassers in Fredericton are to be entertained at luncheon in the Palais. There will be speeches from officers of the committee and alumni and a brief musical program.

D. Thomas Curtin, Journalist And Traveler, Speaks Here On "What's Matter With Europe"

Says Feeling Along Frontier Zones Between Germany and France is Another War Coming Between These Countries; Gives Some Interesting Information

FRANCE'S fear of invasion by Germany is the basis of her foreign policy today, D. Thomas Curtin, journalist and traveler, said last evening in an address to a joint luncheon given by the Women's Canadian Club with the Men's Club and the Saint John branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada. Mr. Curtin took as his subject: "What is the matter with Europe?"

Mr. Curtin held the audience of more than 250 enthralled with his description of present and past conditions in the countries of western and central Europe. The luncheon was held in the Georgian ballroom of the Admiral Beatty. Mrs. A. H. Randolph presided.

PREVAILING FEELING
Mr. Curtin said that the prevailing feeling in the frontier zones between France and Germany was that another war would be fought between those countries in the lifetime of the present generation. Russia was not pacifistic and war planes and ammunition were being constantly manufactured, he said. Austria was not in condition to make war but even in Vienna the conversation over the coffee cups was of war, he declared.

German papers were saying that the next war would see England, Russia and Germany arranged against France, Italy and the Balkans. British statesmen, went on the speaker, were working hard for peace and to put their country back on an industrial basis. To him as an American it was clear that Britain wanted peace, but not at any price. There was no move to give back the former German colonies or hand over Gibraltar to Spain.

GONE FOREVER, IS CLAIM
British statesmen considered that the German world empire had gone down into history with the close of the war. They felt secure against Germany. France did not feel that way. Consequently British and French representatives went into conferences with different viewpoints. Britain did not intend to dispose of Germany pay unreasonable indemnities while France wanted to make the sky the limit.

These had been rocks which had to be avoided, he said. Dawes' plan and the Locarno Pact had been starts in the right direction. The speaker said he took off his hat to England for the way that the pound had been brought back to the normal against the American dollar. (Applause.)

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle had prophesied that the world would shortly receive a shattering from earthquakes and tidal waves, starting before May, 1926. This would last for four or five years. New York would be destroyed and London would be turned into a lake. The catastrophe would be a visitation to France Mr. Curtin said that there was not much unemployment there. On the former battlefields scenes still remained which visualized the war more than an economic problem could. The fear still remained that these scenes would be repeated and France's foreign policy was based on that fear.

KNOWS GERMANY.

The speaker was familiar with Germany, he said, having been there every year since 1911, except 1917. When the mark fell certain interests were able to market their goods very low and profited thereby. Shipping interests reaped a harvest. Some of the laborers profited because their employers were making so much money that they raised prices repeatedly rather than allow the workmen to strike.

When the mark was at the lowest it cost 1,000,000 marks to post a letter of notification that a mortgage was due for 80,000 marks. This mortgage was formerly worth 80,000 and had sunk to less than the value of the postage stamp. He had seen the prices on restaurant menus changed three times during a meal.

Then the Renten mark or gold mark was introduced and backed with gold reserve. This had not been inflated. Obligations had formerly been met by printing money. Now it was being done by collecting taxes, he claimed. France was still in the country with an army. A war was really taking place. The German tried to hold on until British and American opinion should drive the French out. France did not dare relax its grip for fear of the consequences. Five of seven big countries were. They retained a sort of insurance of arms. The premium was high. It was likely to remain high. Disarmament was not being discussed, although limitation of armament was. The spirit of Locarno was an excellent thing, he thought, but it was not the entire result of sudden good feeling. Stresemann had been a leading figure. The speaker knew him well, he said, and had been in touch with his office when British armies were pressing forward on the Somme. Stresemann was a fire-eater then. He had been strong for U-boat warfare and had told the speaker that the United States was a huge country of jelly. Now Stresemann was mentioned as a candidate for peace prizes, declared Mr. Curtin.

Stresemann had planned to hold the iron fields of northern France for all time and to keep the port of Antwerp. The speaker was rather in favor of scattering the peace prizes to Canadian and other troops who had changed Stresemann's mind.

In closing, he reiterated that Germany wanted her territory back from Poland and also wanted a union with Germany. This union might be a good thing but would not take place on account of opposition from France and the Italy of Mussolini.

The speaker did not expect to see a big war in Europe for many years to come but problems, he said, would continue to arise.
