SOUP COURSE, FISH COURSE, MEAT COURSE, ALL TAXED

(From the Toronto Star.)
The reciprocity agreement will mean more trade—more buying and selling—between Canada and the United States. That is the natural result of removing a tariff barrier. It is impossible to say what increase in trade the agreement will bring about, but even with the present volume of trade as a standard, it becomes apparent that huge sums were saved the Canadian consumer by the removal and reduction of duties which resulted, on certain fresh vegetables and fruits alone would amount to about $700,000. But that is only a beginning.

September sees the commencement of the oyster season, and it is interesting to note that a duty of ten cents per gallon is collected on bulk oysters coming into Canada, while oysters in cans are also taxed. The duties thus paid amount to $15,000 in one year, but the reciprocity agreement will absolutely remove this tax upon Canada's oyster supply.

If the soup is made from meat extracts, there has been a tax on that, too. It amounts to $15,000 per year, and the reciprocity agreement reduces it by $4,000.

The fish course is taxed, also. While Canada has great fisheries of its own, there are large importations of fish from the United States every year, over 1,100,000 pounds of halibut alone being brought in. On the 3,800,000 pounds of fish thus imported, a tax of $47,000 has been levied every year. But reciprocity will make the fish course free.

And the salt for oysters, fish, and every other purpose will come in free, too. Salt may seem a small item, but duties amounting to $20,000 are paid on the salt which comes into Canada from the States in a single year.

Then there is the great category of "Meats," and other fresh meats coming into Canada from across the border. Beef, mutton, lamb, pork, veal, chicken, duck, ham, salted beef, smoked meats, etc., are taxed to the extent of $330,000. In canned meats and canned poultry, the duty amounts to nearly $13,000. These various duties the reciprocity agreement will reduce to such an extent that $147,000 in taxes will be removed from the meat course.

There are other substantial reductions in duties which will make living cheaper for Canadians, even if the volume of importations from the States is not increased. With the $700,000 reduction in duties on certain fresh vegetables and fruits, $15,000 on oysters, $4,000 on meat extracts, $47,000 on fish, $20,000 on salt, and $147,000 on meats, the total reaches the impressive figure of $971,000. It is easy to add to the list. The reciprocity agreement remits duties on certain other imports from the States to the following extent: Macerated, $2,000; confectionery, $4,000; pickles, etc., $2,000; prepared cereals, $17,000; honey, over $4,800. These added to the previous total of $971,000, raise the aggregate to over $1,000,000. And they by no means include the whole tax on the family table which reciprocity will remove. They do not take into account the importation of live animals and many other imports dealt with by the agreement. This million dollars is only part of the tax on food which reciprocity will take away. Moreover, it is based on present imports, not on the increased trade which will result from adoption of the tariff pact.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Royalty and the Demands of Etiquette—King Edward and Admiral Berezford—The Princess Radziwill

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

In view of the fact that Prince Adolphus of Prussia, the sailor son of the Kaiser, has traveled more extensively than any other scion of his house excepting his uncle Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia, it is odd that he should have expected American tourists, whom he met for the first time at Monte Carlo, to conform to the rules of court etiquette of which they were in all probability wholly ignorant.

Assuming, however, that the story related to the states and published on Sunday last to the effect that the prince has given expression to irritation at the refusal of some of his American acquaintances at St. Moritz to dine with him, is correct, the prince should have remembered that he was at St. Moritz, not as a prince of the blood, but incognito, as a mere nobleman, under the name of "Count Hensten," and that consequently those whom he met were relieved by that fact itself from according to him the duties and the honors of a prince.

The very fact of the action of a reigning house being incognito, is equivalent to an intimation that he does not wish to be treated as such, and not even Germans would have been under any obligation to treat an invitation to dinner of a "Count Hensten" in the same light of a command as if it had come from a prince of Prussia.

Then, too, royal personages do not look for the same deference from foreigners as they exact from their own people. Indeed, they are reported to rather relish the greater independence of manner of the foreigners as a welcome relief from behavior of complaisance that verges on obsequiousness and that ends by becoming very tiring.

For instance, King Edward when abroad never dreamt of expecting that the French and American acquaintances that he met should pay him the same obeisance as his own subjects, nor that they should consider his invitations to dinner or to dinner in the light of commands.

King Edward and the Admiral

Strictly speaking, it is the sovereign alone, in his own dominions, who has a right to expect that his guests or his dinner should be considered in the light of a command entailing the cancellation of other engagements. Very rarely, however, does a sovereign exercise this right, and in the case of King Edward of Wales, and was always ready to accept an excuse, even when the excuse was not really an excuse, such as, for instance, that which he received from Admiral Lord Charles Berezford. The latter, it may be recalled, had been invited to dine at St. Moritz with the Prince of Wales, who, however, received in reply the following characteristic telegram: "Very sorry. Cannot come. Lie follows by post."

The fact of the matter is that not even princes are invited to dine at the table of the actual kings and queens are entitled to regard their invitations as commands, and then only on the part of their own subjects.

Where seasons of royalty do, however, enjoy an advantage, and that is, that they may be present, not incognito, but under their own name and rank. The royal personages have a right to expect that any man to whom they may send their chamberlain or equerry with an intimation that they desire to dance with him, should concede any other engagement that he may have for that particular dance; and in the same way, women are required by etiquette to throw over any other partner, if asked by a prince of the blood to give him any specified number on her programme. People who attend balls at which royalties are present, are, however, aware of this, and do not expect that they will comply with the laws of etiquette in the matter.

The Princess Radziwill

Princess William Radziwill, whose death has just taken place in Vienna, and whose body has been conveyed to Warsaw for interment, was the husband of the late Princess Catherine Radziwill who played so important a role in South Africa, and underwent a term of imprisonment there for the forgery of the name of Cecil Rhodes. Five years ago the prince obtained a judicial separation from her, granted by the courts of Warsaw, and immediately afterwards he was named in the list of the Prussian army, and a chamberlain of the Emperor of Russia. He was a brother of the late Prince Anthony Radziwill, the head of the entire Radziwill family. Prince Albert Radziwill, who married Dorothy Dawson, is therefore, his nephew. He leaves three daughters (one of whom, Princess Wanda, is the wife of Prince Bischoff of Walsdorf, great-grandson of the Prussian Field Marshal), who was with the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo, and a son, Prince Nicholas.

HERE'S A FAIR QUESTION

Will somebody tell us what is the proper inference from the fact that seven of the opposition candidates in the district of Montreal have declared in favor of reciprocity? They are Mr. Mondou in Yamaska, Mr. Barrette in Berthier, Mr. Gilbert in Arthabaska, Mr. Lortie in Soulanges, Mr. Mareil in Bagot, Mr. Guilbault in Joliette, and Mr. Monette in Laprairie. Is this election being fought to decide whether the reciprocity treaty will be accepted, or is it not? Are the election expenses of these seven candidates coming out of the anti-reciprocity fund?—Montreal Herald.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

To plan your life instead of letting everything just happen; to row your oars with your eyes firmly fixed on some definite goal, instead of just drifting it, is wise.

But to keep your plans to your self until you are very nearly ready to execute them, not to do too much talking about that definite goal is to say the least, expedient.

A young girl in our neighborhood bought an automobile recently. Why? Because Blaine had never mentioned her intention of owning a machine.

That is to the contrary.

Because she had mentioned it so often and talked about it for so long a time that we had gotten over expecting her to really do it.

There are people who can't conceive a plan without being with an uncontrollable desire to communicate it to the public.

The houses they are going to build, the trips they are going to take, the courses of study they are going to pursue, the wonderful things they are going to buy, form the chief topics of their conversation.

And at first we listen to them with confidence and interest.

And then—well everybody knows the classic little boy who cried "wolf, wolf" when there was no wolf, and what happened when the wolf really came.

Sometimes when by some strange chance, our friend of the much pressed-upon plans does build the house or go abroad, or buy the horse or take a course in botany, we can scarcely believe that the thing has actually been done.

I love books and people without too much prejudice.

Don't you?

The kind of books that start you right in with something happening or being said—a swift bit of action or an illuminating conversation; the kind of people who surprise us by referring casually to something they have done instead of grandly discoursing on what they are going to do.

A would-be author told me that the chief criticism a real craftsman made upon his work was that there was always too much introduction.

How many of us get making the same mistake in writing our lines!

Let your acts speak their own prologue and write their own introductions and you will find yourself with a much more attentive audience than words will ever bring you.

Supposing the United States, adopting a Canadian argument against the export of natural products, were to place an export duty on coal, hard and soft?

What would be the plight of the Canadian resident during the winter time, and what would be the plight of the Ontario manufacturer? Think it over.

In our young nationhood we may thrill with the cry "No truck with the United States." But supposing that cry were reversed and made "No truck with Canada?" Had we not better count the cost? The fact is that each of these countries needs the other and, as Ambassador Bryce says, "the greater the trade between them the stronger is the guarantee for general peace and good will."
