

If we as Mr. Darwin
From monkeys are Old Time, in change
As yet the matter
Descendants of our
Have no such time
Who had no rent of
Of government to
No tailor bills came Clothing gave—
And freaks of fashion
Of monkey-girl a
So the olden way's
The new condition
And, Darwin, if ye
Just give us back

No hurrying out of
No belting back
No hasty walk to sl
Of some old bus
The lady-monkey's
Till day the night
In waiting for the
And let her bus
They had no votes
No officers to ke
And o'er defaulters
They never had
So the olden way's
The new condition
And, Darwin, if ye
Just give us back
—[Editor's I

Generous and con
ward all parties, and p qualities of his oppone
he says of himself, th Pateroster." His ad
his allies to-morrow.
tical fri n blaps and a
of terms, and without the one and excuse
ground of state poh Machiavellian blood in opize the idea that t
ought to govern the is banding upon societie tional relations. The end justifies the mean
in his political creed.
sity, or precipitate a uation of his subsequ
with strange bedfello
though frank enough
pressed diplomatically
Peter."

Among modern Eu
most resembled Peel
in his foreign po
ular combination of these seemed to co
Moderate in his pret
in his resources, he withstanding his con
and laborious in ap
ties, what appeared
velous ease and rap
most difficult proble
the result of a cona ratiocination. With troy, and more to tr
at well as an argu
the removal of barri
and built up new sy
made political mista
but no one knew he himself from their li
you imagine he has
is irretrievably lost,
ment upon the dipl mates Europe, and
accept political resu
of solemn treaties,
international law.

In his personal ap
um stature, with a
and energetic in li
broad, high, and
closed by weakness
spectacles; his mot
what voluptuous, o
smile, the joint of Nevertheless, the
ance was expressive
manners, though
would have been
pine country gentl
of the court. Tho temperament, he r trol. Generous in friendships, he wa

Blank pages in original issues.