

Poetry.

PRAYER I WOULD NOT HEAR.

I do not like to hear him pray,
On bended knees about an hour,
For grace to spend bright the day,

I do not like to hear him pray,
With face as long as any rail,
Who never means his debts to pay,

I do not like to hear him pray,
Who never means his debts to own,

The Svesvius.

For the Chris. Watchman.

To every visitor to Naples the most prominent object is Vesuvius. The huge form of the volcano stands forever before him.

At length we set out, and with few interruptions, arrived at a place about half way up the mountain, which goes by the name of the Harmaige.

We climbed up into the hall. We find, to our surprise, that it will hold as many as twenty people. It is more than nine feet in diameter.

THE CHRISTIAN WATCHMAN

sometimes nearly suffocated us as we stood there enveloped by it. At length, almost blinded and hardly able to breathe, we emerged from this horrible place...

Two stately fountains, a colonnade, which in spite of faint, possessing unequalled majesty, a vast piazza, enclosing many acres, on whose immense area...

There is a lovely vestibule. Through this we pass and come to a doorway. A thick curtain hangs over it. Lifting it laboriously we pass through.

There comes a soft air laden with the odor of incense, and strains of music from one of the side chapels, come echoing dreamily down the stupendous aisles.

People stroll to and fro without any apparent crowd. They seem to be promenading. In different places some peasant women are kneeling.

We walk round and round. There are statues which are master-pieces of genius; sculptures which glow with immortal beauty; pictures which have consumed a lifetime, as they slowly glow up beneath the patient toil of the mosaic worker.

But if the interior is imposing, the ascent to the roof is still more so. There is a winding path so arranged that mules can go up with their loads. Up this we go till we reach the roof.

Six or seven acres of territory I watch from this are spread around. Statues rise from the edge. All around cupolas and pillars arise.

Entering the base of the central cupola, a stairway leads up. There is a door which leads to the interior, where one can walk around a gallery on the inside of the dome and look down.

Upon the summit of the vast dome, stands an edifice of great size, which is called the lantern and appears insignificant in comparison with the mighty structure beneath.

We climb up into the ball. We find, to our surprise, that it will hold as many as twenty people. It is more than nine feet in diameter.
