EIGHT CENT MILK PLAN UNPOPULAR

Young Business Men Said to be Considering Scheme to Beat It.

A Milk Exchange Suggested by Those who Say Increased Price is not Warranted.

The milk dealers who raised the price of milk to eight cents last Monday, are finding out that the move meets with anything but popular approval.

The milk dealers who raised the price of milk to eight cents last Monday, are finding out that the move meets with anything but popular approval. Quite a number of householders have gone on strike against the payment of the increased price, and are using condensed milk.

The complaint that the farmers need more money for their milk because they have to pay more for milk feed is not without foundation. Most of the farmers of this part of the country give their cattle very little milfeed, and it is the people's own fault if they continue to pay such high prices.

THE WOMAN MAKES THE HOME

She makes it best, looking after the culinary department, turns her back resolutely upon unhealthful, or even suspicious, food accessories. She is economical; she knows that true economy does not consist in the use of inferior meat, flour, or baking powder. She is an earnest advocate of home made, home baked food, and has proved the truth of the statements of the experts that the best cooking in the world today is done with Royal Baking Powder.

BULBS FOR WINTER FLOWERING

(Christian Science Monitor). There are three well-defined general ways by which indoor bulbs may be grown; namely, in water, in soil and in a soil substitute. Only a few bulbs are really successful in water; all may be grown in soil and soil substitutes. Though the Dutch hyacinth occasionally produces a good spike of bloom when grown in water, it is not so sure enough to be worthy of general recommendation. The only bulb that is practically always successful when grown in water is the Chinese sacred lily, though some other members of the narcissus group to which the sacred lily belongs and some of the Cape bulbs are fairly successful when grown in this way.

When bulbs are to be grown in water it is important that a good root development should be secured before any attempt whatever is made to force the bulb to produce its blossoms. Development of roots takes from four to ten weeks, depending upon the species of bulb and to some extent on the temperature and the freshness of the air by which the bulbs are surrounded. In the ordinary bulb glasses the roots should be kept in a cool, dry place, not necessarily in the dark, but not in full light. They should not be kept, as they often are, in an unventilated cupboard or closet or in a dark, ill-ventilated cellar. The fresher the air the better.

After the roots have developed the glasses may be brought into a light, airy room where the temperature is 60 to 70 degrees. Until after the blossoms have faded the same care as to the water should be continued. There is no use in keeping the bulbs after they have blossomed because their forcing will have reduced their vitality and they cannot be brought back to productive vigor again without too much outlay of time and labor. Therefore new bulbs should be purchased for each winter's blooming.

With soil in which to grow bulbs and with a soil substitute the
