Woodward's Experiment.

A professor of Cornell University recently published a number of hints as to "What to do in case of accidents." One of these was as follows: "If you choke get down on all-fours and cough." One of our neighbors—Woodward—read this, and determined to remember it. Day before yesterday he was eating his dinner alone, and choked upon a piece of beef. Instantly he got upon all-fours and commenced to cough. Just then Mrs. Woodward came in, and the impression made upon her by Woodward's extraordinary attitude and his barking, was that he had suddenly been attacked with hydrophobia. So she first seized the pitcher of water and took it from the room. Then she sent one of the girls up stairs for the mattrass, which was thrown over Woodward, while Mrs. Woodward and the family sat on it and held him down. The madder he got the more alarmed was Mrs. Woodward; and the more he swore and foamed at the mouth, the more she insisted upon the hired girl giving an extra turn to the clothes-line around his leg and tying him to the stove. Then the doctor came and pulled Woodward's arm away from under the mattrass and bled him, and put fly-blisters on his feet, and promised to come around in the evening and shave his head, in order to cup his scalp, so as to relieve his brain. When the doctor called that night, Woodward had a prize fight with him in the parlor; and after sending the medicine man up to the bath-room to wash the blood from his nose and cool his eye, Woodward weet out to hunt for the Cornell professor. There will be pain and anguish in that institution of learning when Woodward arrives. He means war to the knife.—Max Alper.

Butter Made Without Using Milk.

A feature of New York enterprise is an announcement regarding a butter manufactory which prepares very good butter. The following is the published process: Agents are employed to visit slaughter houses and buy up all the beef suet. This is carted to the factory and cleansed. Then it is put into meat choppers and minced fine. It is afterward placed in a boiler with as much water in bulk as itself. A steam pipe is introduced among the particles of the suet and they are melted. The refuse of membrane goes to the bottom of the water, the oily substance floats and is removed. This consists of buttery matter and stearine. A temperature of 80 degrees melts the former and leaves the stearine at the bottom. The butter matter, or cream, is drawn off; about 13 per cent of fresh milk is added and the necessary salt, and the whole is churned for ten or fifteen minutes. The result is Orange county butter at about one-half the usual cost. The stearine is sold at twelve cents a pound to the candlemaker, and the refuse at seven cents a pound to the manufacturer of food for cattle. A company with a capital of $500,000 has been organized for the manufacture, and they expect to make dividends of 100 per cent. The inventor is spoken of as a chemist, but is not named. A chemist in France is already reported to have made milk from grass, which, however, is, as yet, much more expensive than the natural article.
