COURSE ON RIGHTS FOR THE DISABLED

(Ottawa - CUP) — A non-credit course entitled "Rights for the Disabled" will be offered at the University of Ottawa this fall. It is the result of a joint effort between the Resource Education Advocacy Centre for the Handicapped (REACH) and the University in recognition of the International Year of the Handicapped.

The course lasts for ten weeks, and lectures will be given in a hall which has easy access for wheelchairs and suitable facilities for the planned simultaneous sign language translations for the deaf.

Eight lawyers, organized by Lawrence Greenspoon, will collaborate in giving the course. The topics to be discussed are not limited to the legal rights of the handicapped, but will also encompass human rights, international agencies for the disabled, assistance sources, cutting through governmental red tape, education, housing and employment.

Although the course is designed primarily to assist handicapped people, others may benefit from it too, say the organizers. People who deal regularly with the disabled either as employers, advisors or fellow workers will find the course useful and informative.
