THE ATHENS

(By Alice E. Allen.)

Dorothy left her playthings in a heap on the floor. She pulled her chair to the telephone on the desk. She climbed into it. Her curly head reached the mouthpiece. She unhooked the re ceiver and put it to her ear, just as father did.

Number?" said a voice so quickly that Dorothy jumped.

"Two-two-nine-six," she said clearly. That was what father said.

In a minute, close to Dorothy's car, it arimed, another voice spoke.

Hello!" it said spleasantly.

"Is this Santa Claus?" asked Dorothy as much like her father as possible. "Yes," said the voice, sweetly. "What is it?

Dorothy hesitated. "You don't sound just like Santa Claus," she said.

Claus," she said. "Well, I am," the voice laughed. "But who is that—some little girl?" "I'm Dorothy Grant."

"I'm Dorothy Grant." "Dorothy Grant?" The voice seemed arprised. Dorothy hastened to explain. "Dorothy Grant, 234 Park place," she aid. "Don't you know me?" "Oh," cried the voice, "of course I do surprised. said.

now! But I've never seen you, have I? You are Mr. John Grant's little girl, are you not, Dorothy?" "Yes," said Dorothy. "But, you see, he isn't home. He isn't ever, 'cept Sun-days and Christmasce and Thanksgivings such days. That's why I had to you, There isn't any one in the se 'cept Rhoda and Sofia. Sofia's ask you, house so old she's deaf. You aren't deaf yet, are you, Santa Claus?"

Not yet," laughed the voice. "I can hear you quite well. Go on." "Sofia takes care of the house and father, and Rhoda takes care of me. But they don't understand about Evebut they don't understand about Eve-lyn, and to-morrow, when father'll be here, it will be too late, 'cause too-mor-row's Christmas. And you must give Christmas gifts on Christmas, mustn't you want, Dorothy ?"

you want, Dorothy?" "It's about Evelyn. I didn't hear it myself till Rhoda told me to-day when the dressed me-that is. I didn't hear all of it. You don't know Evelyn, do you Why no: I think not."

was just about sure you didn't 'cause, you see, you've never given her a single thing, she says. And she's oller'n me-a little. She's always been lame, but she's never been sick till Think of being sick at Christ-ime! And the doctor says sho mas time! must have fruit and nice things to eat. And she can't, you see, because Rhoda savs it took every cent there was "Where does Evelyn jive?" there with Rhoda. And it's up ever and ever so many stairs. I don't know how you'll ever get there. Are you so very "It's 22 Monroe street. I've been stont

Not so very. 1 climb stairs yet quite eacily." "I knew you'd help me if you only knew about it!" cried Dorothy. "What does Evelyn need most be-sides the nice things to eat?" said she needs most everything.' said Dorothy. "I bought her a Teddy bear with my own money. She just had to have him. But a dolly is quite nec sary, too. Don't you think so?" "Very. And some picture books?" "Oh! And a chair that won't burt her back-a soft, comfy one."

way to dreamland Mr. John Grant went to the telephone. "Two-two-nine-six," he said. In a moment there came to him a roice, low and sweet, with laughs in it. "Is this Miss Annie Claus?" he asked. "Yes. And this is Mr. Grant?" "Yes. You had a conversation with my little daughter this morning, Miss

Claus ?" "Yes-bless the child How did she know me and my number?" "She didn't, but-bless the child-she tried the only number she remembered and found you. She was trying to get

Santa Olaus.' "Santa Claus?" "Yes."

Annie Claus laughed.

Annie Claus laughed. "I understand now," she cried. "That was why she asked if I were deaf yet—and stout. How funny and sweet and dear of her! Well, thanks to her and to Evelyn, I've played San-ta's part and had the loveliest Christmas I ever had so far." "It was good of you, Annie," said

"Good?" Annie Claus questioned. One would do anything for Dorothy." "Would one?" John Grant.

"Anything one could," amended Annie n suspicious haste. "You have Evelyn's gifts ready?"

asked Mr. Grant.

"All ready. You should see -" "And Dorothy's?"

"Dorothy's?"

"The one thing she wants-she told e. Annie. Is it ready?" ne, Annie. "Not quite." "But, Annie, to-morrow is Christmas, and Christmas gifts must be given on Christmas.'

mischievous little laugh rippled A mischievous fittle laugh ripplex over the wire. "Dorothy stipulated that in the selec-tion of her gifts her father must be pleased," said Annie Claus. "That needn't bother you. You have shown his preference for a year and more, haven't you?" "Ye-es, unless he has changed his mind."

mind."

"We hasn't, Annie, and never will. "Yes," said the voice. "What is it Don't you believe that?" "Ye-es."

"Well?"

"Well?" "Come over to my Christmas tree to-morrow night, you and Dorothy. Evelyn will be here. Well talk things over." "Thank you; well come without fail. But Dorothy-and Dorothy's father---will be sailly disappointed if Dorothy's gift isn't ready." "Perhaps it will be." "Aunia--really?"

-really?

But Annie Claus had rung off.

CHRISTMAS SERMON.

Aged Wawfarn- Taught a Curate

panien.

As

THE OTHER STOCKING.

THIS ARTICLE REMOVED

His Christmas Gift

John Semple's steps became slower as her amid the shouts of approval of a number of younger men who crowded number of younger men who crowded 'round to "kiss mother under the misfarmhouse gate. The curtains had not been drawn, and tletoe." Slowly she walked to the win-dow and John Semple, who stood just outside, heard the old man say: "Don't the family was intent on decorating the Christmas tree. "By Jove," he muttered to himself, grieve, mother. Remember our son died an honorable death, fighting for his "By Jove," he muttered to himself, "I'd orgotten it was Christmas ove." Ho leanet beside the big elm just inside the gate, and he reached his hand up with country. almost a caressing movement against its gnarled old trunk. His fingers touched a smooth place on the bark, and long-forgotten thoughts curled his hard nouth the into a boyish smile. Quickly he struck a match and held it to the tree. Yes, there it waa-J. S. and M. R. enclosed in a rude heart. 'I wonder where Mary night " he said to himself. is to night " he said to himself. As if in answer to his question, the great door opened and a girl came run-ning down the path, followed by a stal-wart lad, who called: "Mary, Mary, stop a minute!" But she did not stop. On the came to the side dim trans-

he came to the old elm tree. she came to the old eim tree. John Semple stepped hurriedly just outside the gate where one of the great square posts hid him from view.

As the girl reached the tree she put both her hands up to the carved letters and a soo rose in her throat. The man who had followed gently put is arms around her and said: "Don't his arms around her and suid: "Don't cry, Mary, darling. I am sure if Jack could know he would be glad that I love could know he would be glad that I love you and am going to take care of you. I know I can't be as splendid as dear old Jock was, but you do love me a little, don't you, Mary?" he asked wistfully. The girl put both her hands on the boy's shoulders. "Yes, dear, I do love you, but I want to be loyal to poor Jack. He loved me so much, you know, and when I think of him dying 'way up there in the Philippines, with no cne near and when I think of him dying way up there in the Philippines, with no one near it seems treason for us to talk of love." "But I loved you before Jack did, dearie, and stepped aside when I saw how it was between you. Now Jack is gone forever, but I am here alive and I love you."

ove you. Solemnly the girl looked into her lover's eyes, and then her face was raised to his. He bent and kissed her, and, with his arm about her, they went back the house

"How pretty Mary has grown," John Semple nurmured as he stood again by the elm. "When I tura up I am afraid Ton's chances will be poor," he sa'd, cynically, "even if he is the better man."

Then he squared his shoulders and lowed and when they both passed the door, just as he raised his hand to knock, "I am sorry, old fellow," said John of a white-haired old lady, walking with best to work the store are store they are the store and the store in the st "She shambled along through the mud with her streaming clothes and clouted boots, and we entered my little room. My thoughtful landlady had made my table ready. A plate of hot toast was standing in the fender; the feeble steps across the room. For a package I am leaving them. Go hack to moment she anconsciously stopped under the house, old chap. I know you'll keep the mistletoe that hung under the centre light, and a splendid old gentweman stepped up with a courtly bow and kissed and walked out into the darkness. kettle sang vociferoasly, as if impa-tient to be used; in front of the fire stood my slippers and an easy chair. "To my surprise, my poor, worn, hag-gard companion raised her dripping they must keep very quiet or the Christmas saint would go away without leaving any presents, so the involuntary "Oh!" was hushed almost as quickly as it was formed. The children of the streets glanced about apprehensively. Perhaps even this would result in their being turned this would result in their being turned, into the street by the fat policeman who had been detailed by the captain to see that no piratical youth led a raid on the tree ahead of time. But nothing so untoward happened. Officer Cassidy still beamed upon their pleasure, and at the other end of the Santa Claus in a funny falsetto room santa claus in a funny insecto voice was making a speech of welcome, and telling them how glad he was that the young ladies of the guild could give such good reports of every child.

(By Hollie Carter.)

eides as Santa Claus slipped down the

A subdued "Oh!" echoed from

SHELTER FOR all

SANTA CLAUS

"There are some present here," he toncluded, "one for every child, and candy and an orange, too." He approached the tree, and Bess Fairley stepped forward to assist. In some fashion she stumbled and the some fashion she stumbled, and the great tree with its twinkling lights went crashing toward the side of the great platform. There was a flare of light as the candles caught the resinous needles, and in an instant the flames had communicated with the long stream. ers of evergreen that festooned the room,

Cassidy was all action. "Turn in an alarm on the corner," he commanded the janitor, who had stolen in to see the fun, then, raising his voice, he continued, "Come on ont uv this, every blessed wan of yez or I'll eyz all in."

up front the young girls of the guild were pleading with the guests to be quiet, but Cassidy's stentorian voice had a better effect. The children, who had huddled in little groups in the aisle, un-certain which way to turn, now made a rush for the door, steadled by Cassidy's admonitions into avoiding a panic. Then the members of the guild hurried after them as the firemen rushed up the Amy Vaughan in her Santa Claus cos tume huddled in a down tume huddled in a doorway on the opposite side of the street and watched the progress of the street and watched the progress of the fire, unconscious of the biting cold. The December dusk had fallen and no one noticed the shivering figure, or, if they did, they sup-posed her to be one of the mock Santa Chauses, set up on the street corners by the Salvation Army to solicit contribu-tions for the army's Christmas dinner to the poor. Only Cuthbert Bonner, turning in at his own doorway opposite tra burned building, noticed the shaking figure.

"How now, Sir Santa?" he greeted. "Is the street corner too cold or have you deserted your post of watchfulness for the fascinations of a fire?"

Amy shrank back into the shadow. Of all persons, Cuthert was the last she wished to see in her present plight. The heavy whits beard and the full wig were ample disguise and she had only to disguise her voice. "I'll go on in a moment," she promised.

There was little need of vocal disguise Her teeth chattered so that she could scarcely make herself understood. Some thing in the tone attracted Bonner's attention and he looked more closely. The costume was more laborate than those provided by the army. The long, loose coat was of thin cotton flannel, as were the others he had seen, but the cut was not the same and the wig said, as he came toward the girl. "Slip said, as he came toward the giv. "Sup off those things and get into these. "Come,' he added, as Amy made no move to obey. "You've at least been foolish in a good cause." He knelt to take of the wet foot-gear, but as he raised one unwilling foot and saw the dainty slipper which the oilcloth hid he rose to his feet and stepned back chimney and made his jovial bow to the children. They had been told that stepped back.

"I beg your pardon," he said in slight confusion, 'though it is your own fault for letting me continue in the belief that you were a boy. I remember now, a girls' guild hired that hall." "You were not to blame,' said Amy.

"It was your own kindness. If you don't mind I will put these on. I will don't mind I will put these on. I will call you when I am done." When she did call Bonner entered with a trap. "Here is the coffee,' he said, briskly, and when you are ready to go there is a cab at the door. This coat will give you protection from the cold. You can send it back by the cab-man. He will be paid for the round trip, so you need not worry about that." Amy smiled as she saw that he had Amy smiled as she saw that he had provided a moustache cup for the cof-fce. It was like his thoughtfulness. She need not even remove the mask-like beard.

"I've a maiden aunt who sends me "I've a maiden aunt who sends me one every Christmas," he explained, as he saw her look at the cup. "She lives in the country where such things still flourish, and she sends one every year because she knows that båchelors break things so often. Dear old soul, he decart's knows L have a round down she doesn't know I have a round dozen on the shelf at this very moment. I'll

"I wonder if you will ridicule my present," said Amy, suddenly speaking in her natural voice, and tearing off her beard. "Your year of probation is up and my answer is ____" "Yes?" he asked, as he sprang forward.

ard. "Yes." assured Amy. "I'm sorry, It was dear, that I ever doubted you. It was all a mistake. Your hospitality to Santa Claus is the final evidence of your goodness.

"Bless the old saint,' said Bonner, "I'm glad 1 offered him shelter." "I'm glad, too," said Amy, demurely. "He has brought me the best present of

ABOUT THE MISTLETOE.

Popular Christmas Plant in Olden Times Was Sacred.

Although in the majority of Canadian and English homes mistletoe is display-ed at Christmas time, is is remarkabde how little is known of this curious plant. Mistletoe is a parasitic growth appearing most frequently on apple trees, although it is also found on evergreers and on poplar, hawthorn, pear and oak trees, but very rarely on the last named. It is an evergreen bush about four feet in length. thickly-crowd-ed with branches and leaves. Unlike all other plants, its leaves extend down as well as up. The plant flowers every year, but does not bear the little whits berries until it is four years old. The mistletoe proper is a native of Europe. red plant, because its berries grow in clusters of three-emblematic of the Trinity. The ancient Celts used to hang sprigs of mistletoe around their necks as a safeguard from witches. The maid that was not caught and kissed under the mistletoe at Christmas would not be married within a year, so the tradition goes. According to the old rules the ceremony wa snot properly performed unless a berry was pulled off after each kiss, and presented to the maiden. When all the berries were gone the privilege

THE CHRISTMAS DINNER

There was a quick sound outside the window and all faces were turned toward it. Someone came to the door, but the man outside slunk into the shadow as a dog bolted growling down the path. The dog came back suspiciously, I as he reached the man on the porch began to whimper. "Quiet, old fellow," but said, as he fairly hugged him in his anxiety to keep him from making hus joy known to those inside. "Dear old boy, you know me, don't you " he whis-pered.

bat that the old man drew himself up proudly) "I know that he did not shirk his duty, even though he knew it meant death."

The man outside seemed to stagger litle as he repeated, "He did not shirk, even though he knew it meaut death." That far-off morning at Dagupan, when fcar clutched him by the throat and h left his comrades to carry on the sortie, body was clustered about Tom and Mary and even mother's mouth wore a smile which, however, did not reach her grief stricken eves.

ean tree he was at his master's heels. "I am sorry, old fellow," said John Semple, "but it won't do. You nust go backs. I have to put you, also, into the package I am leaving them. Go have

0000

CERRE

.....

"But, father," she said, "if I only knew where my boy was lying I think it would be easier to bear. Only the meagre words: 'John Semple missing,' in report after that awful skirmial Dagupan," and her lip quivered with the tearless griet of old age.

Just then a voice, old and quivering, inside the room, began: "Children, I have something to say to you. Tom here has told me that Mary has pro-mised to be his wife. We all have loved Mary ever since the time we thought she yould be John's wife, but L know, could would be John's wife; but I know, could John epeak, he would say he was glad that Mary will find happiness with Tom. Mother still grieves for her first-born, but" (and the old man drew himself up came up before him. Once more he looked inside. Every John Semple bent down over the dog. John Semple bent down over the dog. "It's up to me, old fellow," he said, "to. deliver my Christmas gift now." Once more he patted the dog, and quietly, with head erect, walked toward

"Most anything you have left over!" "ied Dorothy, in great excitament, Evelyn'd like anything, 'cause she hasn't anything, to begin with." "I see," said the voice, gently, "We'll have a lovely Christmas for Evelyn. Now, isn't there something you'd like for yourseelf, Dorothy?"

Dorothy hesitated

'A pretty gown".

"And flowers"

eried

"And some slippers"-

There is-one thing," she said, slowy. "I've never even teld father. But do want it dreadfully."

What is it?" encouraged the voice. "I want is it?" encouraged the voice. "I want-a-mother all my very own," said Dorothy, "Barbara has one and Connie. And Maude has one and two-grandmothers besides. Why, ven Evelyn has a mother -a sick one Mine died, you know, when I came. And I would like another one."

"Yes." said the voice, "I'd like a pretty little one, with dim like Connie's mother. She isn't hardly ever real cross, even when Con-And she kisses nie tears her gown. And she kisses Connie real often, and puts her to bed every single night, and tells her stories. But most any, kind would do if father ked her. She'd have to stay here, you know.

A mischiovous little laugh counded in Dorothy's ear. But in a minute the voice said:

"Is that all, Dorothy?"

"Yes, thank you." said Dorothy, as father had taught her.

"You dear, quaint little thing!" cried the voice. "May I come to see you Why, of course, Santa Claus," said Dorothy.

But wasn't Santa Claus funny ask that, father?" asked Dorothy. Fa-ther had surprised her by coming home before her bedtime, and she was telling him at that happened. "Of course, he's coming. Doesn't be always? Why should he ask if he could?" Father chuckled.

"What number did you ask for, Delhe said.

"Two-two-nine six," said Derothy, be one you always say." Father gave a long, low whistle. Then

h. asked:

Was Senta's voice deep and gruff?" Dorothy shook her head.

little way it had laughs in it," she Aie

After Dorothy had gone her happy many other chaps.

hands and burst into tears with the words, 'O, what husury!' "That was the best Christmas sermon I ever heard, and the only one I have never forgotten."-Youth's Com-A Song of Epiphany 1An Once Santa Claus, as in he came, Loaded with toys and many a game, Saw two little stockings hung side by side. saw two files aforeness have been side. close to a fireplace, broad and wide. "Ho: Ho: 'said he, with a laugh of fun. 'I'll have no cheating, my pretty one. I know who lies in this house, my dear, 'There's only one little girl lives here?'' But just as he spoke he saw pinned to the toe Of the one, a note, and he cried "Hal-lo?' narm. Three kings knelt by the cmsger-bed. His sign had drawn them from afar. Their slicht camels knelt without, Incy scught the spot with many a doubt, But now was shea them round about The radiance of the Star. "Dear me, what's this?" For he saw with Rich gifts they laid at Mary's feet, surprise, he pushed up his spectacles close to Frankincense, gold and iragrant myrrh--The ittle Christ looked down and smiled, Held closely by His mother mild, He touched with soft hands of a child The ihree kings as they knelt to her. As ne pushed up his spectratics topological his even, his even, That the queer little note was addressed to him; So he read by the light of the moon-beams dim— "Dear Santa Claus:-I want you to know Who the other stocking is for, that so She may share in your gift, it's Clara's, you know. She's a poor little girl, but as good as But Gaspar held one tiny fot A moment in his hand. Whispered and wept with lowered head-"I see a path this foot must tread. Yea! but sharp stones it shall be bled. For God doth so command." you know. She's a poor little girl, but as good as could be. So I hope you will fill up her stocking to-night. 6000 And help to make her Christmas bright If you haven't enough for both stockings there And Melchior raised to bearded lips One straying hand, so rosy white: Pleading, "O Thou in heaven above, Who even the hearts of men may move, Save from the scare this hand or love, Protect it by Thy might!" there, Please put all in Clara's I shall not care." "God bless you," he cried, and then, as he seeks 8 Then sadly touched the downyhend Balthapar, grave and stately there; With tears he said: "O crue! thorn By which this mild brow must be torn! O robes of mockery! Crown of scorn! Which the Lord of all must weat!" He drew from a bag beneath his great cloak. A lot of warm clothes, and he tucked them in To Clara's stocking, and then with a pin Some more useful clothing he fastened on there, Then he filled up the other to make a But Mary smiled and gently said To the sorrowing sages kneeling t "In love, through pain. He came to So, too, His path on earth must i To paradise through Gethsemane, In love His cross to bear," --Elizabeth G. Reynolds, in Wor World for Deember. pair, With some of the loviest toys you could find. Woman'

santa Claus

"Burned out and your reindeer team ran away, eh?" he said, with a chuckle. "Come up to my rooms, my boy, and ied those abourd garments while I have Any shuddered. "Shed those gar-ments indeed!" She was glad that Cuthert thought her a boy, but the mistake might be, embarrassing and she muttered some excuse about going on presently. "Nonsense,' was the reply. "You'll freeze to death in ten minutes more. Come on.

He, held open the door, but Amy shrank back into the vestibule. Without more ado Bonner caught her by the arms and led her inside. Ilis rooms were on the first floor and presently she was standing in his sitting room wherein an open fire diffused a grateful warmth.

"Now warm up and tell me all about commanded Bonner as he deposited burden in front of the fire. "I bet his burden in front of the fire. "I bet I can tell you. Your clothes are burned up and you are afraid to go home in se. That right?"

Amy nodded hed head. Her teeth had stopped chattering now, and she was afraid to speak. Bonner did not appear to notice the omission, for he ran on.

"Let me give you a piece of ad-vice, my boy," and he said half serious-ly. "No matter how you trick yourself cut, you hold on to your money after this. It's a good plan to follow. My man's making you a cup of hot coffee, then I'll lend you one of my overcoats and you can go home in a cab. It's not often that I have opportunity to offer shelter to his highness of Christmas Land, and I want to do it up brown. I'd offer you my something stronger, but it's not good for boys. Feet wet:" Amy shook her head, though the thin slippers she wore under the oil-cloth boot top were soaking wet. A sneeze betraved her and Bonner gave a

"You little Ananias," he cried, 'they

-If you have no family, find one. -In the olden days big families were

A family affair.
Hyou have no family, find one.
In the olden days big families were the role.
Without a visiting stranger.
Att and kin kanered together from a fine families wore the role.
The was in the feudal days, when the feudal days, when the feudal days of the role.
The was in the feudal days, when the feudal days.
The was in the feudal days, when the feudal days.
The was have the role for the the the feudal days.
The was have the feudal days.
The sary the feudal days.
The sary the feudal days.
The basis was have the normal days.
The basis was nothing more than Garousal, and the dhars were notorious to the excesses.
The boar's head was the most disting word have the feudal days.
The modern Christmas dinner differs of the days.
The boar's head was the most disting word have the feudals.
The Fendish mational dish of plum (have dist).
The modern Christmas dinner differs of the days.
The modern Christmas dinner differs of the french do such things to pervent.
The modern Christmas dinner differs favored by Germans, who include pork boy dermans, who include pork boy days.
The includes poulding, smoked goose and days.
The sare the principal dish at the fine of the days.
The dinner test dish eature dish of principal dish at the dish the cale days.
The dish eature leaf, one to each guest.
The was the dish dinner is guite complete without dish dinner differs in the was the dish defaute of the turkey, which has become not only and the dinner differs is duite complete without dish dinner differs is the chief dish.
The modern christmas dinner differs

A CHRISTMAS GAME.

A Yuletide version of the donkey party is played thus: On a sheet sketch or paste a design of a Christmas free Have each branch of the tree terminate in a circle containing a number, using the numbers from one to ten or one to twenty-five, according to the size of the tree. Each person playing is blind-folded in turn and is given a resette with which he must "decorate the tree." Each person aims to pin his or her ros-ette on or near to the highest number "You little Ananias," he cried. 'they are wet. Take them off while I get dry ones." He vanished through the doorway, but was back in a moment with a pair of fur-lined slippers. "They are a trifle long for a boy like you, but they're dry and warm," he "he first grize.

right. And to those who have always a kind word to say To others, who are not so happy as thez."

Santa Claus is just as real as