William Fox presents the greatest sensation that has ever been offered to the motion picture public

"The Prussian Cur"

FEATURING
MIRIAM COOPER

WAR pictures have come and war pictures have gone. But here is a titanic production that in its scope and sweep and in the momentous world events portrayed, will go down in the annals of the Great War as this war stands above all other war pictures that the world has known.

Into "The Prussian Cur" have been woven the dark threads of German international villainy for half a century—woven through revelations by Capt. Horst von der Goltz, a man who was a secret agent of the Kaiser for ten years.

The events recorded are world events. The characters that move through the scenes rank with the mightiest of all time.

Although Director R.A. Walsh has made many other masterly productions for William Fox, "The Prussian Cur" not only towers above them all, but is destined to appeal to the American people as the greatest popular attraction ever filmed.

In "The Prussian Cur" are shown with vivid realism the barbarous German outrages which dragged America into the world conflict.

The labor and expense of such a Herculean undertaking have been enormous. But William Fox, knowing that "The Prussian Cur" was worthy of any effort, ordered Director Walsh to go the limit.

Historical archives were ransacked for details; secret records were examined; high officials were interviewed; fortunes were spent on collecting data and building the imposing sets demanded by the action.

The leading feminine role in "The Prussian Cur" is played by Miriam Cooper, star of "Woman and the Law," who has won enduring fame for her dramatic triumphs in "The Birth of a Nation," and other noted successes.

"The Prussian Cur" sums up in swift, thrilling, inspiring scenes the whole history of an epoch. It will appeal to every red-blooded American.
