On Thursday morning, a prisoner named William Ellworth escaped from Queen's County jail, where he had been awaiting his trial in the Supreme Court, charged with stealing brass. It appears that while the prisoners were getting their rating served out to them at 6.30 a. m., Bllworth took advantage of the jailer's back being turned and slipped into what is known as the jail chapel and hid there until the officials were all at breakfast; when he got out into the yard and with the help of a plank and wheelbarrow, he managed to scale the fence. He is still at large.
