More about Ferrer.

The following additional extracts from the article on Ferrer, from which we quoted last week, will be found interesting, we feel sure:

"As I have already remarked, Ferrer took a leading part in promoting the 4th anniversary which disgraced the capital of Catalonia in the month of July the year, however, prudent enough to keep as far as possible in the background. During those days of riot and rebellion upwards of sixty churches, convents and religious establishments were pillaged and given to the flames. The valuable library of the Pares Esculpion, containing 80,000 volumes, and able incomparable physical museum, were destroyed by fire. No exact return can be given of the priceless art treasures in the churches and conventual buildings—paintings, ornaments, sacred vessels, etc., which fell a prey to the incendiaries. Urged on by the ringleaders the men of the city invaded the crypt of the convent of the Capuchin Nuns—the tombs were violated and the remains of the deceased Sisters profaned and desecrated. The number of deaths due to the riots is estimated at about three thousand. Such were some of the fruits of the teachings of Ferrer the 'philanthropist.' 'I do not believe,' writes M. Gustave Babie, the correspondent of the Paris 'Illustration,' that since the Paris Commune the incendiary has been guilty of such misdeeds or that he has heaped up so many ruins.'"

In presence of such a record it was extremely audacious of Senor Lerroux, the Republican leader, to assert a few days ago in a speech at Barcelona that the blood of Ferrer had caused a cry of indignation to rise in Europe, which demanded the abolition of the death sentence for political offenses. One can only say with Alphonse Karr: 'Qu'on me montre les assassins commencent!'

"Ferrer's trial was no Star Chamber business. The proceedings were carried on in public, and every facility was offered the accused to clear himself of the grave charges brought against him. But he had, in reality, no defense. He denied participation in the rebellion but he was unable to prove an alibi. He declared that he remained concealed during the trouble; he refused, however, to name the family with whom he stayed. On the other hand, the evidence against him was conclusive. Various witnesses, amongst them men professing Socialistic and Anarchistic opinions, testified to the part he had taken in the disturbances, distributing revolvers and inciting the populace to violence. His action was in accordance with a report of the Paris police which described him as 'a most dangerous revolutionary—propagandist of his ideas by every means in his power.' The officers of the court martial, seven in number, were unanimous as to his guilt, and with equal unanimity, the death sentence was pronounced. The judgment of the court martial was confirmed by a legal tribunal and the condemnation confirmed. There was a second revision of the sentence at Madrid with a similar result, and the Cabinet saw no reason to recommend the condemned man to the royal clemency."

The London Times, which cannot be accused of sympathy with those who condemned Ferrer, had this to say, among other things, on the 14th of October: "Neither the Captain General of the province nor the Supreme Military Court, nor the Cabinet, found that there existed any sufficient reason for the revision of the judgment of the Court of First Instance, or for a recommendation that the royal clemency should be exercised in favor of the condemned man. In view of the outcry which Ferrer's death will assuredly provoke—and has indeed already provoked—in many quarters it is well that this evidence of deliberate judgment should be carefully borne in mind. The Spanish authorities, civil and military, are obviously in an infinitely better position to judge of Senor Ferrer's guilt and to estimate the severity of the penalty warranted by the interests of justice and of the State required than is explicated than his imperfectly informed sympathizers in England, France, Italy, and elsewhere."

The Temps of Paris, a Protestant organ which nobody will suspect of clerical leanings, made the following comment in an article on the 19th of October: "The corpse of the condemned man becomes, after a few hours, a political argument. . . . A special procedure has not been instituted for Ferrer. Knowing all the facts, nobody can now say authoritatively that Ferrer was condemned without proof of his guilt. During the past five days we have heard much about freedom of thought; in the interest of such freedom reflecting minds should avoid rash conclusions. An effort being made to delude an Anarchist dogma from the Ferrer question, it would be dangerous to accept this dogma before submitting it to careful examination."

The Journal des Debats is even more explicit: "The newspapers of Madrid have given detailed accounts of the trial, and it does not appear from them that Ferrer has been the victim of illegality or of a judicial error. There seems no doubt that the Spanish people have an apparently, the idea that the court martial condemned Ferrer as a free-thinker, and not as a criminal. The crime with which Ferrer was charged, a principal author of a conspiracy, was not an imaginary one. . . . There was question of the worst abominations of which a civilized country has ever been the theatre, of the usurpation of honor to which Barcelona was a prey during several days. No penalty was too severe to punish the guilty parties."

The Madrid correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph wrote that in Spain the great majority of the population was convinced of the justice of Ferrer's condemnation. The Cologne Gazette remarked: "We have no right to suspect the manner in which the trial was conducted, nor to criticize the motives, the motives of which we are absolutely ignorant of. The so-called proofs of Ferrer's innocence, put forward by his friends in France, are in no sense proofs—they are but letters and declarations emanating from Ferrer himself."

Speaking of the excitement which the execution provoked, the Gazette de la Croix, a German Protestant organ, wrote: "It is with disgust that the German people witness the artificial emotion which it is sought to provoke amongst the masses."

The Vermeire, the official organ of the German Socialists, whilst in duty bound, expressing its sympathy with Ferrer, was honest enough to add that "there was no reason to make him a saint," and warned the Socialists against the tendency of the Radical press to represent Ferrer as a defender of the proletariat.

To the above, let me add the following authoritative testimony. At the request of M. Louis de Tess, editor of the journal A.B.C., the Paris Figaro published an eloquent protest from that gentleman against the Ferrer campaign. Here are some of the principal passages of the document which is dated Madrid, 16th of October: "It is with profound sorrow I see this campaign of calumny directed against my country by the treasury of some, and ignorance of the truth on the part of others. Ferrer has been judged by a lawful tribunal with all the guarantees which a cultivated and civilized people offer. At the trial facts have been proven. It was not his opinions which were the cause of his condemnation, but his acts, so chief of the revolutionists, of those who at Barcelona gave themselves up to incendiarism, to pillage, to the violation of the tombs of religious, to the assassination of women and children. Ferrer was convicted of participation in these crimes on the testimony of Republicans, Socialists, and Anarchists. The sentences of the court martial were public. The accused freely chose his counsel, who discharged his duty in perfect liberty. Ferrer was free for many years; he published his books, to teach at the Modern School, to develop Anarchist doctrines which were an incitement to incendiarism and assassination. It is clear that he has been condemned for his part in the massacre and incendiarism of Barcelona, not for his personal opinions or for political reasons. Those who wish to calumniate Spain before Europe conceal the truth. The fugitives of Montjuich, of which everybody is talking, are infamous lies."

Of the correctness of the judicial procedure and of the justice of Ferrer's condemnation further testimony comes from a quarter free from bias or suspicion. When the Conservative Government resigned and its place was taken by the Liberals under M. Moret, there was great jubilation in the Anarchist camp, as it was confidently expected that the new Cabinet would immediately set about the rehabilitation of the 'martyr.' To their undigested disgust nothing of the kind was done. A Catholic Minister could not have expressed himself more to the purpose than did the new War Minister, General Lozano, who declared in an interview to a Figaro correspondent that 'legally and judicially Ferrer was rightly condemned; his guilt was sufficiently established, not as a propagator of ideas or opinions, but as the director of sedition. Two-who to good faith criticizes the procedure followed here,' remarked the General 'ignorance of Spanish legislation. The appearance before a civil tribunal was impossible, not only in virtue of the law regarding jurisdiction, of which I am the author, and which entails to courts martial offenses against the army, but even according to the general Spanish Code, which always makes cases of rebellion amenable to the military tribunal. As regards pardon, no exception could have been made in Ferrer's favor after the execution of the other condemned persons.'

The Liberal Minister of War concluded by remarking: "I repeat there is not, and there will not be, an 'Affaire Ferrer' in Spain."

Restitution Through the Confessional.

A remarkable case of restitution of stolen money through the confessional took place recently in Trent, the capital of the Italian province of South Tyrol, known as the Trentino, and the meeting place of the famous council of the sixteenth century. On August 20th last, it was discovered that the sum of over 200,000 lire had been stolen from the Banco Cooperativo of Trent. In spite of rigid investigation and search by the police no trace could be found of the thief, and the excitement grew very intense as the incident was made capital of for political purposes. Employees of the Bank had been imprisoned on suspicion, but no evidence against them was forthcoming. On November 2nd the director of the Banco, Signor Gianni received a note from a well-known historian, the Rev. Mark Marini of Bressanone, requesting him to call on a priest named business, which turned out to be no other than the raising over to the director of a sealed package, containing one-half of the stolen money. This package had been received by Father Borgo from another priest coming from another country, who in turn had received it from a position with the request that he restore to the Banco Cooperativo, "in order that the innocent might not suffer, financially or otherwise, for the guilt of a few. Nothing further could be told by the priest named without violating the seal of confession. The case is very striking and edifying and a glowing example of the power of the Sacrament of Penance.—Amorice.

Recently Solomon Rolnick made the statement that there are still 15,000 "moderates" among the French clergy. Curiously enough the once famous ex-Abbe Lisy replied to him in Revue Historique. This is a portion of what the abbe says: "I would not give them (the moderates) 1800 . . . All that they could have hoped for was that the Church might tolerate them and the orthodoxy mitigate its uncompromising attitude in their regard. We know what the answer of the Church has been. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and I shall take care not to make any predictions as to what will become of modernism; but what I think I do see at present is that it is utterly routed and that its annihilation does not seem to present any difficulty. Since the death of Tyrrer there is nobody among the clergy who claims to be a Catholic while refusing obedience to the Pope."

Lord Acton remarks that the best rampart against Socialism is a restricted Federalism. We hope that the leaders of the British Conservatives, if they attain power, will think of this, and begin its application by giving Home Rule to Ireland.—Oakes.

Was All Run Down. Weighed 125 Lbs. Now Weighs 185. Mrs. M. McLean, Dulon Junction, N.S., writes—"I wish to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. Three years ago I was so run down I could not do my own work. I went to a doctor, and he told me I had heart trouble and that my nerves were all unstrung. I took his medicine, as he enclosed me in the box, but it did me no good. I then started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and had only taken one box before I started to feel better. I continued their use until I had taken several boxes, and I am now strong and well, and able to do my own work. When I commenced taking your pills I weighed 125 pounds, and now weigh 185 and have given birth to a lovely young daughter, which was a happy thing in the family. When I commenced taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, I could not go upstairs without resting before I got to the top. I can now go up without any trouble."

The price of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is 50 cents per box, or $1.00 for $1.25, all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Toronto, Ont., Can.
