

Take a Hint Give a Gillette

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

A gift of a Gillette Safety Razor appeals to one of man's strongest "weaknesses", his love of ease and comfort. It makes shaving quick and easy—a pleasure instead of a task. So naturally it wins his whole-hearted appreciation, renewed every morning.

The selection of Gillette Sets is this year better than ever.

There is the new "Aristocrat"—a superb Set in white French Ivory, blade boxes to match, with a handle of new and graceful shape, as illustrated.

The patriotic "Bulldog" out just a month or two, has made a tremendous "hit". Its feature is a stocky, heavy handle that gives a new balance which most men like. The case is of gray Antique Leather, handsome and business like.

These two new Gillette Sets are priced as usual—$5.00 in Silver Plate, $6.00 in Gold Plate.

Then there are the favorite Standard Sets and the handy Pocket Editions, in a great variety of Plated Metal and Leather Cases, at prices from $5.00 to $6.00.

Or you can pick out a Combination Set, as elaborate as you wish at prices up to $25.00.

You cannot choose a more practical Christmas Gift for the man who is working away at home, while for the soldier boy who is off to the front it is even more acceptable.

The "ARISTOCRAT"—the new Gillette Set in French Ivory.

Look over the assortment at your Dealer's. If you do not find just the Set you want, write us and we will see that you are supplied.

Only a Beggar; BUT A Queen Among Women

CHAPTER XXVI.

The impulse born of pity—and a vague fear—prompted her to follow the girl who, hearing Diana's footsteps, paused a moment, then crossed the road, and, with a faint cry of anguish, sprang on to the stone seat in one of the recesses and from thence to the parapet itself.

Diana called to her in terror-stricken accents, but the girl, taking no heed of the cry, flung up her arms with an awful gesture of despair and dropped into the river.

Diana stood for a moment frozen to the spot with horror, then she cried aloud, as she thought, for help; but her voice was as frozen as her form; and it was not in answer to her frenzied appeal that a man who had been coming along on the other side of the bridge, dashed across to her, demanding hoarsely:

"What is it?" Diana, without turning her head, and gasping for breath, pointed downward. He craned over, must have seen the figure on the water, upon which the moon shone at that instant was beaming, and without a moment's hesitation, he turned and ran down the bridge steps. Diana, feeling sick and giddy, fled after him, and was in time to see him seize a boat and push out into the stream. The boatman and he pulled like madmen toward the spot where the girl had gone down, and presently Diana saw the man who had come up to her on the bridge almost fling himself over the boat, clutch at something with both hands, and lift it in.

The whole terrible occurrence had taken place only a minute or so in the action, and Diana had scarcely recovered from her first shock before she was bending over the still form from which the water was running.

"Is she dead?" asked the boatman callously. "Sometimes they are and sometimes they ain't."

"No, she's alive," said the man who had rescued her. "I can feel her heart."

"You got her pretty sharp, mister," said the boatman. "It's a case for the perficer," he looked up and down the river. "There ought to be some of 'em near—"

"No, no!" said the man quickly. "No need for the police—poor soul! I've got some brandy"—he pulled out a flask. "Here's a sovereign for you—will you get a cab? This lady will help us."

He turned to Diana, stared at her, then shrank back, murmuring: "Diana!"

She looked up—she was on her knees supporting the girl's head—and saw that the man was her father.

In his recognition of her he seemed to have lost consciousness of the girl lying at his feet, and stood shaking and panting; but Diana's gentle heart was lavishing its pity on the frail form resting on her bosom.

"The cab!" she said. "Right!" he responded hoarsely, shaking himself and pulling himself together. "Help me lift her. Quick! There's a police boat coming!"

Between them, and quite easily, for their burden, alas! was scarcely heavier than a child, they carried her up the steps, at the top of which the boatman had already got a cab waiting. The cabman showed a certain amount of reluctance, but Garling slipped a coin into his hand, and, supporting the girl, Diana and her father got in.

"Where to?" said the cabman. "It will have to be a hospital, I'm afraid," said Garling moodily and anxiously.

"No, no! My room—I live near here!" said Diana, and she gave the cabman her address.

Not a word passed between father and daughter until they had carried the girl to the attic and placed her on the bed; then Diana, gently signing to Garling to go outside, said, with ashen lips:

"Wait!"

The fire was still burning, there was some hot water, and Diana undressed the girl and bathed her cold limbs, and when she began to breathe painfully and heavily, wrapped her in the blankets and held her hand tightly; for she knew how terrible would be the first moments of returning consciousness. They came at last, and in a voice scarcely audible, the girl wailed:

"Where am I? Oh—God forgive me!"

Diana's arm went round her. "You are here with a friend, quite, quite safe! Lie still—oh, one moment, I will leave you for only a moment."

With trembling haste she warmed some milk, and, raising the frail form, made the girl drink it. At first she refused, but, melted by Diana's tender eyes and gentle voice, she yielded at last; and fell back on the pillow with a sobbing sigh.

Diana sat beside her, giving her more of the milk at intervals, and presently the girl's eyes closed and she fell into the deep sleep of exhaustion. Then Diana opened the door. Garling was leaning against the wall, his head sunk on his breast, his hands thrust in his pockets; the whole attitude of the square, short figure was one of utter dejection. He started at the sight of Diana, and, following her into the room, glanced toward the bed questioning.

"She has come to and is asleep; but she is very weak. Oh, poor girl! poor girl! If I had been there a moment sooner—"

Her eyes filled with tears, and she bent over the bed to hide them.

Garling looked round the room with its meagre furniture and poverty-stricken aspect.

"Diana!" he said in a hoarse, reproachful whisper. "Why—why are you living here, alone, and in such a place?"

Diana's face flushed and her eyes were downcast; then she lifted them and looked at him sadly, steadily.

"I see; I know!" he said with a groan. "You wouldn't be beholden to me for—anything, not even for food. That's a typewriter; you get your living—"

"Yes," said Diana in a low voice. "I earn enough"—she faltered as he looked round again significantly. "I am content. Ah! you did not think that I could take—"

"My money?" His rugged face worked. "My girl, you were wrong. The money I gave you was honestly earned, every penny of it; yes, every penny of it. But you couldn't know that, seeing me at—work that night. And you've left your grand friends and live here, in an attic in the slums! My God, I am punished! My own daughter livin' from hand to mouth; half starving, may be, while there's thousands an' thousands, eye a million lying ready for her! Why?"—his voice dropped and he sank back to the rough form of speech of his early days—"them clothes are thin and old and not fit for this weather. And you—you are as used to every comfort and luxury. Diana, it's—It's hard on me!"

Diana turned her head away. It was not for her to remind him that the children must suffer for the sins of their fathers. But, indeed, he did not need the reminder.

"It's a hard world and a cruel," he said brokenly. "And it's full o' misery. That poor girl there"—he drew near the bed as he spoke and looked down at the white, pinched face.

"Why?" he exclaimed in a whisper. "I know her! I mean I've met her before. It's the girl I saved from being run over."

Hurriedly, disoriented, he told Diana of his former meeting with the girl they had rescued.

"I took to her the first moment I saw her," he said, gazing at the face with its still wet hair clinging to the marble-bued forehead. "She was so pretty, so—so like a little, innocent child. I wanted to help her, to keep sight of her; but she was proud and wouldn't take more than the half sovereign, and wouldn't tell me her name. 'Seems as if everybody was too proud to be helped by me, Diana. Yes; that's my punishment, I s'pose. But'—almost fiercely—"you've got to let me keep her now. She'll want good, nourishing food an' firing, and a doctor."

"Yes," said Diana very quietly. (To be continued.)
