"Of course," said the artist, not without embarrassment, as he continued: were indignant at your father and sister for their cruel and unjust treatment of you, and we thought you a Quixotic little heroine, redusing our triend's offer as you did. A sudden mist dimmed the radiant eyes, and her voice was tremulously, tender as she said:

Yes, he was most noble; but I-Ishowed him that I could be as noble as he, though I was only the gardener's caughter. They praised her in the most glowing words they could command, and Lindsay Greville added: "After all, the triumph would not have been so great as it seemed, for Tracy is comparatively poor now. It transpired only a few days after your disappearance that there was another claimant to Cedarhurst, so the Tempests had to step down and out." A cry of wonder and alarm came from her beautiful lips. She gazed at wonder, mixed with dismay. How had the secret so sacredly guardtrunspired. Was it possible that Tracy Tempest aiready knew her as whom he had been so kind so chivalrous, yet who was to come between him and a noble inheritance?

Many months ago her father had told her all, and, strange, to say, she had failed to connect the story of the woman she had released from the haunted wing at Cedarhurst. Perhaps one might have done so, but that he showed her a grave in sunny Italy with her mother's name on the stonea grave that was in reality that of the consumptive maid the Tempests had taken abroad with them to represent Virginia Tempest while she was locked into the ruined wing at Cedarhurst,

By Vixen's own desire their stay abroad had been protracted two years. She was reluctant to return since she had learned the truth. She had hated to think she should come between Tracy empest and the noble inheritance he believed would be his own.

And now, when homeward bound, at last, she was to hear suddenly the curred to interrupt it as before." news that her place was filled by a usurper; that trouble and loss had come to her idol by the false arts of one he despised and scorned.

'I see you have not heard one word of the story," said Herbert Arden. "It is as romantic as one of Lindsay's novels, and, by the by I see your are reading his 'True Love and False.'" "Yes; but go on with your story," she said, with unconscious impati-

He smiled, and began:

"'Once upon a time,' as the story books say, Tracy Tempest's father had an old uncle who married late in life. His wife died soon after the birth of a daughter, and the father died when the girl was twelve years old, and left Cedarhurst and the little heiress to the guardianship of Mr. Tempest."
"Oh, yes; I have heard all that before," said Vixen. "And the little heiress grew up and contracted a secret marriage. She had one child, a daughter, and then she went abroad with her guardian and died in Italy. That is the story, is it not?"

They stared at her in amazement, and Herbert Arden said:
"I thought you did not know the

"A little bird whispered it to me," smiling pensively at his astonishment. "But you did not know it all," he continued, "for you see, the heiress, Virginia Tempest, or Mrs. Dougles, as she was in secret, did not die at all. There were some mysteries about the explanation of it all that I do well understand; but anyhow, Douglas returned last year and claimed her own, both her fortune and her daughter, who all the time had been hidden away in Sunny Side at the old gardener's cottage, everybody believing she was his own child." He paused for breath, but she did not speak, only gazed at him with di-lating eyes, full of vague terror, as of some coming blow.

To fill up the pause and express his honest sentiment, too, the author said: "There was no poetic justice in the story, Miss Jarvis, for it should have been you who turned out to be the lady's daughter instead of cruet, black-eyed Lettie."

"Lettie?" The name fell from her lips in tones of horror. There was a roaring in her ears that was not the sound of the sea, a swimming in her head. Strange lights flashed before her eyes, then grew dim as the white lids fell, and her head dropped upon her bosom. She Arden brought a glass of water and Greville lifted the bowed head, and pressed the glass to her lips. A long sigh and the lids unclosed and the dazed blue eyes looked up.

"It was the sun-that was all!" she said, when she had swallowed, with difficulty, the water. She lay back, pale as death, against the chair, with closed eyes, her heart throbbing wild-

The truth had all rushed over her. It was her own mother she had released from her imprisonment at Cedarhurst. She had gone away and found out that her daughter was at the old gardener's at Sunny Side, and when she went to claim her own, Lettie-wicked, heartless Lettie-had usurped her place, and palmed herself on Mrs. Douglas as her own child.

Vixen's hear swelled with indignation against unprincipled Lettie.

CHAPTER XXVI.

"Shall I betray her? Shall I tell them the truth?' she asked herself indignantly. There arose before her a vision of the false, cruel girl filling her place in her mother's love, and jealous misery took possession of her heart. "Dear, dear mother, I pray heaven that you may not have given her the love that belongs to me!"

While she was dwelling miserably on the thought, Herbert Arden exclaimed: "The worst of it, Miss Jarvis, is that our friend Tracy, whom we thought so noble, so chivalrous, has fallen from the high pedestal he occupied in our minds, and shown himself as mercenary and time-serving as ordinary humanity. He disliked Miss Douglas exceedingly when she was only Lettie Jarvis, the gardener's daughter; but now he is engaged to marry the heiress."

It was a sudden, terrible blow. She could not repress one long shudder, as if an ley wind had blown across her. Then she sat up straight and looked at him with steady eyes, although lips and cheeks had paled to an ashen hue. "To marry Lettie?" she said, trying to speak calmly, and praying heaven that they might not detect the quiver of despair in her voice. Oh, how the beauty of the day was dimmed; how discordant sounded the voice of the waves! Why should not Lettle have been satisfied with taking her mother's love that she must lay her snare for Tracy Tempest, too-her Prince Charming of two years agonay, of now, of ever, for how could she ever tear her heart away? The old sweet song of those careless days at Sunny Side seemed to blend with the voice of the waves: Dark his eyes must be, and bright, And his hands so lily-white:

Sweet Prince Charming-it is he Come at last to marry me. "To marry Lettie!"

Those three words in flaming letters seemed painted on the sky and sea, blurring her vision everywhere she looked, and then she heard Lindsay Greville's voice going on with the horrible tale.

"It is most likely they are married now, Arden, for the day was set for June, you know, unless something oc-The blue eyes questioned him mutery and he continued:

"You see, it was this way, Miss Jarvis. Mrs. Douglas took her daughter abroad for a year after she found her, and gave her a foreign polish, you know. They came back last summer and never went near Sunny Side, but right off to some watering-place, where the Tempests were staying, and in a very short while the engagement was announced."

She sat looking at him, pale and rigid, almost as if carved in marble, all the color gone out of her face, all the light from her eyes, all the hope from her heart; but they thought it was the sun, as she had said, never dreaming that it was despair over the man whom, two years ago, she had bravely refused to marry. The voice of the young man went on in its careless tones, searing her heart as with a red-hot iron.

Tracy took brain fever. I believe myself he did it on purpose to put off the marriage"—laughing. "Anyhow, he was ill for weeks, and convalesced very slowly, so then the doctor ordered him a trip to Florida, and of course the wedding was off until his return. When we crossed the 'herring pond' the first of April, he was still in the South, and me heard that the wedding day was set for the first of June." (To be Continued)

Exercise and Health.

Exercise is a splendid thing for a healthy person. But when the body is weakened by disease, exercise strains rather than strengthens. Exercise will not cure a "weak" stomach. It may increase the appetite, but it won't cure dyspepsia, and an increased appetite is a curse not a blessing to the sufferer from dyspepsia. Take exercise by all means but also take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if there is a deranged or diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. This medicine is not a cure-all but a specific for diseases of the stomach and digestive and nutritive system. It strengthens the stomach purifies the blood. and increases physical vigor.

There is no alcohol contained in "Golden Medical Discovery" and it is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and every other narcotic.

It is strictly a temperance medicine. "I wish to say that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has proved a great blessing to me," writes Mrs. Ellen E. Bacon, of Shutesbury, Pranklin County, Mass. "Prior to September, 1897. I had doctored for my stomach trouble for several years, going through a course of treatment without any real benefit. In September, 1896. I had very sick spells and grew worse; could eat but little. I commenced in September, 1897, to take Dr. Pierce's medicine, and in a short time I could eat and work. I have gained twenty pounds in two months."

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY

LAKE OF BAYS, MUSKOKA, This interesting place is now rapidly coming into prominence, situated as it is in the heart of the hunting grounds of Muskoka. It is reached by Grand Trunk System from any point to Huntsville, thence by steamer over the beautiful waters of Fairy and Peninsular Lakes to Grassmere, where every facility exists for reaching different parts of the lakes by means of the Lake of Bays Navigation Company. Anglers will find this a veritable paradise, and can safely be promised an abundance of speckled trout as the result of their efforts. Excellent hotels and boarding-houses will be found here. Rates, $1 and upwards per day. Tickets, folders and all information from G. T. R. agents, or write M. C. Dickson, District Passenger Agent, (Union Station), Toronto.
