In Cauada he ranks as lieutenant-colonel since 1876, but the gentleman whom he maligns, the late Col. Williams, was a lieutenant-colonel in 1866, and was therefore senior to "Lieut. Col. Von Straubenzie, late in command of the infantry brigade, Northwest field force," by ten years.

Some may ask why did Col. Williams allow Von Straubenzie to appear to be his commander? To those who knew that gallant officer the answer is plain; but to vallant officer the answer is plain; but t the general public it may be stated Col.
Williams went Northwest with the Midlanders and did not wish to, and would not leave them unless to assume con of the entire corps. He was offered but refused the command of the infantry corps. Had Gen. Middleton been shot then Col. Williams would very quickly have assumed command of the entire corps and over Von Straubenzie. As it was he was happy in leading his Midlanders; he avoided exercising his legitimate authority over the "fuss and feathers," as well a over the Grenadiers, 90th, Scout over the Grenadiers, 90th, Scouts and Artillery, Further, if the offi-cer in command of the Battleford cer in command of the Battleford column, Lt. Col. Otter, chose to speak he could assert that Col. Williams notified he could assert that Col. Williams notified him at the very outset of the campaign that in case the Midlanders joined his column. Col. Otter, though his junior officer, would be permitted to retain his command unless in special case. He would be courteous enough to save Col. Otter's dignity. So he acted with Von Straubenzie.
