

cal Account of the Deluge," in which he summarizes the conclusions reached. Among these conclusions are that in the opening chapter of Genesis we are "justified in holding that we are dealing with one narrator, and that he endeavors faithfully to represent to us the results of his experience and observations," and that "we thus have preserved for all time in the narrative of the deluge in Genesis a precious and unique record, from the standpoint of human history and divine revelation, of the latest of those great continental subsidences which, in the course of geological time, have been the means employed by the Creator for destroying and renewing the animal population of the land." He concludes by bringing out the prophetic and practical aspects of the deluge as presented by our Lord and St. Peter.

The Missionary Review of the World. New York and Toronto: Funk & Wagnalls Co. $2.50 a year.

George Müller, whose life work is well described in the August number of this magazine, is a most remarkable instance of what faith and trust in God can do. On that principle he has for seventy years carried on his remarkable orphanage work in Bristol. He has handled, in that work, nearly seven millions of dollars, and yet he has never asked, either directly or indirectly, a single penny from anyone except from God. When the cupboard was empty and hundreds of mouths to be filled, he betook himself to prayer, and the answer always came. He is now in his ninety-first year, and boldly declares that God has never forsaken him. The rest of the magazine is taken up largely with matters concerning Roman Catholicism, both as to its errors and its work. It contains also its usual extensive information regarding missionary work throughout the world.

The Review of Reviews for August, while largely given over to the issues of the Presidential campaign, finds space for the treatment of other important topics. Besides the character sketch of Mr. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, the Review has illustrated articles on Harriet Beecher Stowe and Dr. Barnardo, the father of "Nobody's Children." There is the usual elaborate résumé of the current magazines; and the departments of "The Progress of the World," "Record of Current Events," and "Current History in Caricature," answer the typical American demand for what is up to date and "live."
